PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

The petitioners, over 40 "non-nearby" dairy farmers whose farms are so located as to require them to pay a nearby differential under the Connecticut Federal Milk Marketing order[1] to other dairy farmers located almost

[1] 7 C.F.R. 1015.72 (1968). Although the nearby differential provision of the Connecticut Order was held illegal by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on July 16, 1970, pursuant to the decision of this Court in the consolidated cases of exclusively within the State of Connecticut and who unsuccessfully attempted to intervene in the United States Court for the Northern District of New York to challenge the adequacy of representation in this suit and its maintenance as a class action and to seek other relief thereon, humbly petition for a writ of certiorari to review that part of the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which upheld the decision of the District Court denying intervention and which held that this suit was a proper class action in which the plaintiffs' class was adequately represented and accorded due process in conformity with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and that the suit was adversary in nature rather than collusive as a matter of law and otherwise, as well as from that part of said judgment which would authorize the District Court to disburse any portion of the escrow fund to defendant-interveners nearby producers and to award attorneys' fee therefrom to counsel for defendant-interveners and named plaintiffs or to possibly entertain proceedings to rewrite and extend the illegal nearby differential over a period of time and prevent its immediate termination after repeatedly intentional and frivolous delays.

[1] (continued) Frederick T. Zuber Et Al. v. Russell Allen Et Al. and Clifford M. Hardin, Secretary of Agriculture v. Russell Allen Et Al., decided December 9, 1969, 396 U.S. 168, the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York issued a temporary restraining order against the Secretary of Agriculture on August 5, 1970, restraining him from terminating said nearby differential pending a hearing on whether the illegal nearby differential may be "phased out" on a graduated basis over a minimum period of one year. Consequently, the Connecticut nearby differential is in full force and effect more than a year after this Court's decision in the Zuber case and is being prolonged through repeated delays and filings and through the mutual consent of counsel for the opposing nearby producers who intervened in the District Court as defendants and counsel for the named plaintiffs. Both have succeeded in continuing the escrowing in this case in spite of repeated attempts by petitioners to terminate the neaby differential and stop the escrowing thereunder, and the attorneys for the named plaintiffs (non-nearby producers) and the defendant-interveners (nearby producers) have jointly proposed the continuation of the nearby differential as aforesaid in seeking a minimum of $500,000 attorneys' fees from the escrow fund of approximately $1 million on a percentage basis.

OPINION BELOW

The Per Curiam opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported at 428 F.2d 822, and that of the District Court at 290 F.S. 785. The temporary restraining order issued by the District Court on August 5, 1970 restraining the Secretary of Agriculture from terminating the nearby differential is set forth in appendix E to this petition. Neither the Secretary nor the named plaintiffs took any appeal from such temporary restraining order, but the case is presently in the Court of Appeals pursuant to motions for supplementation of that Court's decision in respect to jurisdiction of the District Court thereunder to entertain the joint proposal for continuation of the escrowing and phasing out of the illegal nearby differential over an extended period.[2] The petitioners were denied a stay of

---

[2] In view of the fact that the counsel for named plaintiffs and defendant-interveners intended to seek a supplementation of the decision of the Court of Appeals of July 16, 1970, after ascertaining that this Court had granted an extension of time to December 12, 1970, for the filing of this petition herein, and inasmuch as these petitioners believed that additional delay would be sought by them through piece-meal submissions of motions and memoranda and requests for unneeded oral argument and that no open and definitive action would be taken by the parties until petitioners were out of this case, the petitioners themselves filed a motion in judgment in respect to their appeals concerning inadequacy of representation, improper class action and collusion as a matter of law and otherwise by the Court of Appeals Order of September 10, 1970, set forth in appendix D hereof, and that Court has taken no definitive action in respect to petitioners' prior and present requests for immediate termination of the nearby differential and cessation of escrowing thereunder in accordance with the decision of this Court in Zuber v. Allen. Petitioners have also moved the Court of Appeals for a stay of disbursement of any part of the escrow fund in respect to any award other than to the non-nearby producers and have requested immediate disbursement thereof to the non-nearby producers.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on July 16, 1970, as aforesaid, and is set forth in appendix C hereof. By order of October 8, 1970, the Honorable Mr. Justice Harlan extended the time for filing for a writ of certiorari to and including December 12, 1970.[3] The jurisdiction of this court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254 (1), 2101(c) and 2106.

[2] (continued) the Court of Appeals on October 17, 1970, requesting any needed clarification and an Order directing the immediate termination of the differential and the escrowing thereunder. Petitioners took the position that no clarification was actually required in respect to the ordering of such immediate relief, but they had also unsuccessfully sought that relief on a number of occasions commencing on January 14, 1970, in the Court of Appeals after this Court's decision of December 9, 1970, in Zuber v. Allen.

[3] The petitioners original due date for the filing of their petition was October 14, 1970. As their motion for an extension of time

[1] (continued) reflects, they were not notified of any of the proceedings in the District Court pertaining to continuation of escrowing, extension of the illegal nearby differential, or application for counsel fees by the attorneys for the opposing producers, both of whom lost this suit which was determined solely by this Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen and who were also guaranteed or paid a fee for their services herein. When a representative of petitioners and one of their counsel indirectly ascertained that a hearing was to be held in respect to such matters in the District Court on September 23, 1970, and appeared in the courtroom as the only persons in the spectator's section thereof, the counsel for the parties thereupon succeeded in having such hearing removed to chambers, with said representative and counsel for petitioners denied permission to sit in thereon, and the said proceedings were then continued to October 14, 1970, the last day for the filing of any petition by petitioners in this Court concerning the aforesaid matters in order that they might still have some claim concerning entitlement to be heard and notified of proceedings in this suit. However, the time for filing said petition was extended for 60 days by Mr. Justice Harlan, but the resultant additional delay thereafter in the District Court and presently in the Court of Appeals where delaying oral argument is being sought on the matter of extending the illegal differential for at least another year has again resulted in petitioners being unable to protect their interests in this suit unless their petition for certiorari is granted, in that the parties would claim that petitioners had no standing to question any jointly proposed action taken by the parties respective counsel after the running of the time to petition for certiorari or the denial thereof. In fact, counsel for the named plaintiffs and for the defendant-interveners have consistently maintained that the petitioning dairy farmers are not parties to this suit and consequently need not be served with any pleadings or notified of any of the proceedings or even be allowed to attend any hearing in this suit.

In respect to the jurisdiction of this Court to act in directing disbursement of the escrow fund even if this suit was collusive as a matter of law or otherwise, the parties have admitted the illegality of the Connecticut nearby differential, and the cases set forth on page of this petition support the jurisdiction of the Court in this regard.

STATUTES, RULES AND REGULATIONS INVOLVED

This case primarily involves a question as to whether it was collusive as a matter of law or otherwise, and the only Rules involved are those of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure pertaining to joinders of persons needed for a just adjudication (Rule 19); class actions (Rule 23); intervention (Rule 24); depositions and discovery (Rule 30); and summary judgment (Rule 56). The case in the District and Appellate Courts involved the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, 50 Stat. 246, as amended, 7 U.S.C. 601 et seq., particularly Section 608c(5) thereof, but in view of the admitted illegality of the nearby differential the statute is not set forth herein. The relevant regulation involved is 7 C.F.R. 1015.72, the nearby differential provision of the Connecticut Federal Milk Marketing Order, and it is found at page 15 of appendix G hereto.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The nearby farm location differentials existed in but three of approximately seventy-five Federal milk orders when the case of Blair v. Freeman, 370 F.2d 229, challenged the nearby differential of the New York-New Jersey Milk Marketing Order. On November 18, 1966, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled that such nearby differential was a fundamental violation of the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1937 and beyond the statutory power of the Secretary of Agriculture. On January 11, 1967, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia granted a preliminary injunction in the case of Russell Allen, et al v. Orville Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture, which challenged the nearby farm location differential of the Massachusetts-Rhode Island Milk Marketing Order. The government's brief filed in the Blair case had admitted that the first nearby farm location differential of the 1937 Greater Boston milk order, predecessor of the nearby differential of the Massachusetts-Rhode Island milk order, was "identical in purpose and effect" to that of the N.Y.-N.J. nearby differential and "predicated on very similar findings." The detailed identity of the two nearby differential provisions was related over several pages of the Secretary's brief in Blair, and the Secretary also acknowledged therein that he had always construed Section 8c(5)(B)-(ii)(c) of the Act as constituting authority for the promulgation of the nearby differential as an adjustment to the uniform minimum price for "the locations at which delivery of such milk is made". He admitted that both nearby differentials "were promulgated on the basis of the same statutory provision", further stating as follows:

> "Thus, dating almost to the very enactment of 7 U.S.C. 608c(5)(B)(c) the Secretary has construed that provision as permitting the very type of nearby differential which the appellants would have this Court declare unauthorized. It is, of course, axiomatic that such a long-standing contemporaneous administrative construction of the Section by the official charged with its administration is entitled to great weight."

The Secretary's brief in Blair also quoted approvingly from the relevant Congressional Reports defining the "market" differential authorized under subsection (a) of the Act to illustrate that the nearby differential could not be justified as the authorized market differential but only as the location differential authorized under subsection (c) of the Act. The Blair decision recognized that "the 'market differential' rationale is plainly not a tenable basis for the nearby differential", and it noted that "no justification on this ground is even attempted in either the Secretary's findings or the Brief for Appellee."[4]

In view of the foregoing admissions made in Blair, the defendant Secretary was unable to present any plausible defense or distinguishment in respect to the nearby

[4] The Blair decision recognized that the market differential was the "direct-delivery differential" of the N.Y.-N.J. order which provides for an adjustment to the uniform price when milk is delivered directly to a city plant or market instead of initially to a country plant for re-shipment to the city plant or market. This "customary market differential" is a part of the zone differential of the Mass.-R.I. and also the Connecticut milk order.

differential of the Mass.-R.I. order when the Allen plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction on January 11, 1967. As counsel for the nearby producers in Allen later phrased it in argument before the appellate court, "the defendant dug his own grave in the Blair case."

It was clear that it would be only a matter of time before suit would be filed challenging the nearby differential of the Connecticut federal order, and the institution of such suit in the District of Columbia would almost certainly result in a favorable decision for non-nearby producers, particularly since the findings of the Secretary in promulgating the Connecticut nearby differential in 1959 were almost identical to those made by him in 1957 when the nearby differential of the N.Y.-N.J. order was promulgated. Certiorari by the Supreme Court would be unlikely if three separate unanimous decisions from the same Circuit had ruled the three nearby differential provisions to be illegal.

The only possibility of ultimately prevailing in the Allen case and in securing a conflict in respect to the impending challenge to the Connecticut nearby differential necessitated that a suit be filed immediately in another federal jurisdiction against the Connecticut differential. Such different jurisdiction would also enable the Secretary's and nearby producers' counsel to avoid in large part the admissions that were a matter of record in the Blair and Allen cases.

The defendant-interveners below were represented by Attorney Conard of the law firm of Shipman & Goodwin of Hartford, Connecticut, and said attorney and firm are also counsel for the Connecticut Milk Producers' Association (CMPA), consisting almost entirely of "nearby" producers. The CMPA, now known as the Consolidated

Milk Producers' Association, filed briefs amicus curiae in the district and circuit courts in the Blair case on behalf of nearby producers and the continuation of the nearby differentials. Reuben Hall, Esquire, of Boston, Massachusetts, was on both of said briefs, as was the law firm of Klagsbrunn & Hanes of Washington, D.C., represented by Lawrence Hollman, Esquire, and Carlyle Ring, Esquire. When the CMPA attempted to intervene in the Allen case, it was again represented by Mr. Hall and the latter two attorneys, and Mr. Hollman and Mr. Ring thereafter represented the 6 individual "nearby" producers who were allowed to intervene in that case. Attorney Conard also participated therein in behalf of Connecticut nearby producers and Mr. Hollman and Mr. Ring not only claim association with Mr. Conard in this present case but have acted as Mr. Conard's Washington associated counsel in the related case of Herrington v. Freeman, C.A. No. 2861, in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. In addition, Attorney Hall testified as the main witness for the defendant-interveners in the Cranston case at the request of Mr. Conard, and the CMPA officials admittedly maintained the defense in this case in the name of the three intervening "nearby" producers, an arrangement that also existed in the Allen case.

This suit was filed against Orville Freeman, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, on February 9, 1967, in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of New York at Albany, N.Y. The plaintiffs were three dairy farmers from the Troy, N.Y., area, Harold R. Cranston, Dale R. French and Helmer A. Carlson, whose farms are so located as to render them ineligible for the "nearby" farm location differential payments of the federal order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut milk marketing area. 7 C.F.R. 1015.72.

The record below discloses that, prior to the institution of this suit, Attorney Conard contacted the U. S. Department of Agriculture after the entry of the preliminary injunction in the Allen case to ascertain if the nearby differential could be suspended by the Department pending a final decision in any litigation concerning the legality thereof.[5] The Department informed him that this would not be possible, and this suit was filed almost immediately thereafter. The Cranston complaint

[5] One objective of such attempt was to destroy the escrow fund as the source of attorney fees and expenses and thus cause the possible abandonment of the Allen lawsuit and the non-institution of any suit challenging the Connecticut nearby differential. If the nearby differential was suspended during such litigation there would be no escrowing thereunder and hence no escrow fund from which to obtain compensation and reimbursement of expenses. Another reason for such attempted suspension was that the preliminary injunction in the Allen case was initially escrowing the entire nearby differential, monies that were attributable to the marketings of milk of not only non-nearby but also the nearby producers, and the Allen plaintiffs originally contemplated moving against the escrowed monies of nearby producer payments if they prevailed in their case. The suspension of the nearby differential would prevent such escrowing and thus effectively preclude such possible loss in damages to the nearby producers. Although the relevancy of such attempt to suspend the nearby differential to the solicitation and collusive aspects of this case is apparent, it should also be noted that the nearby producers were intially willing to give up the entire differential during this case and to thus allow each producer to obtain his full uniform milk price during this litigation – the ultimate objective of any bona fide suit to eliminate the nearby differential. However, after the preliminary injunction was entered by consent in this case to escrow only the monies emanating from the marketings of milk of non-nearby producers, the same nearby producers' counsel now claims that the CMPA nearby producers are "equitably" entitled to the escrowed monies of the non-nearby producers.

requested a judgment declaring the invalidity of the nearby differential provision of the order and an injunction against its future enforcement by the Secretary. The record discloses the filing of an amended complaint on March 2, 1967, for the purpose of adding three additional plaintiffs (Ottman, Mesick and Phillips), whose farms were zoned to render them eligible for the 23-cents nearby differential payments.[6]

On the same date, Chief Judge Foley granted a motion by three producers from the 46-cents nearby differential area for leave to intervene as defendants. There was no opposition to either motion.

On March 9, 1967, after hearing in the district court, the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction escrowing the contested nearby differential payments was granted by Judge Foley, and his Memorandum-Decision stated as follows:

> " • • • In effect, the challenge generally is the particular provisions of the order in issue are unauthorized by law and should be declared void and unenforceable. • • • Moneywise, a significant factor favoring the

[6] The addition of such eligible "nearby" producers as plaintiffs was on the ground that they were ineligible for the 46-cents nearby differential payment of the order. Although these intermediate "nearby" producers were eligible for the 23-cents nearby differential under the Connecticut order, the Secretary had admitted that its existence actually caused these producers to lose 17-cents per hundred pounds of milk rather than gain the 23-cents provided for by the nearby differential provision. This admittedly inconsistent and arbitrary operation of the differential provision was independent ground for declaring it invalid but no such argument was made to the Court and Cranston's attorney added such "nearby" producers as plaintiffs.

> injunction is that the attorney for the intervening defendants, permitted by grant of formal motion to so intervene on March 2nd, unqualifiedly stated at the hearing on that date he would not have any objection to the signing of the preliminary injunction. Interestingly, it is these intervening defendants from whom the payments or credits will be withheld by the injunction order.
> Although the government earnestly argues distinguishability, I think there is enough similarity — at least upon the law and orders involved — with the Blair ruling adverse to the Secretary, from which certiorari was not sought, to satisfy the probable success requirement. Further, in Allen et al. v. Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture of the U.S., Civ. Action No. 3379-66, United States District Judge Matthews recently signed a preliminary injunction in an action involving a milk order of this type regulating the handling of milk in the Massachusetts-Rhode Island milk marketing area. * * *" (R. 115)

The docket in the district court discloses that a pre-trial conference took place on August 4, 1967, after notice to plaintiffs' attorney on August 2, 1967, but there is no indication that any pre-trial order was entered. (R. 906, A-N; T. 390, 5/27/68).

The record reflects that Judge Timbers took over the case on August 10, 1967 (R. 1161), the docket entries for said date stating that, "Trial moved by Plaintiffs' Attorney." The 4-page Transcript (R. 1161; A. 1) discloses that all proceedings took place in chambers on this date, and that the Court stated that, "following an informal pre-trial conference attended by counsel for the respective parties, and pursuant to the agreement reached by counsel at the same pre-trial conference, the trial in the case on the merits commenced today at Albany that is the hearing on the claim for a permanent injunction and for a declaratory judgment, by agreement of all counsel, the evidence at this time to be received is limited to the administrative record which will be marked as a full exhibit, Defendant Freeman's Exhibit A in evidence." The trial was thereupon adjourned or continued to October 3, 1967 and subsequently to October 18, 1967 at 2:30 p.m., after agreement upon a schedule for filing and service of designations of the record on which respective counsel would rely.

The parties have contended that the trial commenced on August 10, 1967, rather than October 18, 1967, in opposing as untimely the attempts of various applicants to intervene in the action. However, the plaintiffs' attorney testified during a hearing on May 27, 1968 (R. 906; T. 390) that, "On August 7th, I was in Danbury, Connecticut, visiting a relative, and I went over from Danbury to Hartford and came up through Hartford on the 8th of August, and I conferred with Mr. Conard (defendant-interveners' counsel) in his office in Hartford, particularly with respect to the fact that I would not be able to go on with a trial of this case, if such were contemplated at this time, * * *."

On October 10, 1967, a motion for leave to intervene for the purpose of staying the Cranston case was filed by Russell Allen, et al., appellees in the case involving the nearby differentials of the Massachusetts-Rhode Island order that was pending before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Approximately 20 briefs had been filed in said case involving the same issue, including briefs by the attorney for the defendant-interveners in Cranston, the States of Connecticut, Vermont and Massachusetts, and the respective parties. In view of the contentions in such briefs concerning the interrelationship of the Connecticut, Massachusetts-Rhode Island, and New York-New Jersey milk orders, the need for uniformity espoused by defendant's and interveners' attorneys, the "chaotic" disorderly marketing conditions that would result from non-uniformity of treatment, etc., the Allen applicants alternatively moved for transfer of the Cranston case to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

The Allen applicants maintained that principles of sound judicial administration, judicial comity and abstention, and the benefits flowing to the court and parties from a decision on a fully briefed appeal warranted the stay or transfer of the Cranston case. The hearing of March 2, 1967, on the motion for preliminary injunction indicates that the court's calendar was crowded in the Northern District, and the presiding judge stated on October 18, 1967, that in order for him to sit in that District, "it has been necessary for me to bring into my district in the District of Connecticut, a Court of Appeals judge to sit in that court, a District Judge from out of the District." (R. 1162, p. 42, 10/18/67). Nevertheless, the parties vehemently opposed said motion, and it was denied on October 18, 1967, on the grounds, among others, that it was untimely, that the trial had commenced on August 10, 1967, and that the applicants did not have an interest justifying intervention.

As a courtesy to the Court, the Allen applicants did not specify a return day for their motion but they did request that the Court set the motion for hearing on a date sufficiently in advance of the trial to enable applicants to pursue any appropriate appellate relief. The district court advised that said motion would be heard immediately prior to resumption of the trial at 2:30 p.m. on October 18, 1967. The record of said hearing reflects that the presiding judge stated that, "I think, probably, the issues in connection with that motion might be heard and determined promptly, before we go any further. * * * ." The transcript then discloses the following at page 6 (R. 1162):

> "THE COURT: I will, however, be glad to hear any other counsel on the motion to intervene, if counsel wishes to be heard.
> MRS. FRIEDMAN: I would just like to say a few words for the government. I would like to summarize our position very briefly.
>
> THE COURT: I would be glad to hear you.
> MRS. FRIEDMAN: First, as you pointed out, the applicants for intervention in this action, Mr. Ryan's clients, have absolutely no interest in this lawsuit whatsoever. * * *."

The transcript of the aforesaid hearing fails to reflect any such statement by Judge Timbers theretofore in said hearing, but it also discloses that the court distributed a prepared 8-page Memorandum Decision denying the motion of Russell Allen, et al., as aforesaid at the conclusion of the hearing on the motion.

Counsel for the Allen applicants had also advised that he desired to enter an appearance in the Cranston case for a non-nearby farmer, and he also advised that the expedited briefing schedule in the Allen appeals precluded adequate preparation for any participation in Cranston if trial commenced on October 18, 1967. He was advised by the law clerk of the presiding judge that the court was not disposed to the granting of a continuance, and no further action was taken by the court in this connection. The inability to obtain such continuance indicated that the trial would commence as scheduled and that the Allen motion to transfer or stay the action would be denied.

On October 18, 1967, when it was apparent that no other dairy farmer would be able to participate in the Cranston case, a suit was filed by George H. and Kenneth H. Herrington, against the Secretary of Agriculture in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia under a different statutory basis than the Cranston complaint and consituting different causes of action. The Herringtons marketed their milk under the Connecticut order, and the differential provision's operation caused them to lose from $5,000 to $6,000 annually in order to award a monthly differential payment of $12.50 to the average Connecticut nearby producer. They were of the opinion that they were entitled to summary judgment and/or mandamus against the Secretary, this relief not being sought in Cranston even after the Cranston plaintiffs were furnished with a prepared motion for summary judgment.

Thereafter, the district court allowed the filing of a second amended complaint in Cranston containing entirely new causes of action set forth in the Herrington case and which proceeded under completely different statutory provisions than the first two Cranston complaints. Additionally, motions by the plaintiffs and defendant-interveners to maintain and defend the suit as a class action were thereafter filed and ruled upon by the district court. The fact that said motions were entertained almost nine months after commencement of the suit on February 9, 1967, did not render such motions untimely. (R. 230, 262)

Thereafter, the district court also entertained extensive testimony and voluminous exhibits relating to the Massachusetts-Rhode Island order and its predecessor milk orders, including the very administrative hearing records that had been ruled on by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia in the Allen case and which were then before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

In spite of such testimony and exhibits concerning the Massachusetts-Rhode Island milk order and its predecessor milk orders, the trial transcript discloses that the presiding judge adopted the contentions of the defendant and interveners that the respective milk orders were different and that Blair and Allen were distinguishable.[7] (R. 1162, pp. 488-90).

The district court found it necessary, however, to consider and rule on testimony and exhibits concerning such

[7] After maintaining in this case that Blair and Allen were distinguishable, the milk orders different, the administrative hearing records separate and distinct, etc., counsel for defendant and associated counsel of interveners then rushed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to urge reversal of the Allen case on the basis of the Cranston district court decision.

distinct milk orders and hearing records in arriving at its decision which it acknowledged was at variance with Blair and Allen. It actually upheld the Boston order involved in Allen.

The second amended complaint in Cranston that contained the same statutory basis and causes of action as the Herrington complaint was not filed until October 19, 1967, on which date the defendant withdrew his opposition to the Cranston motion for leave to file the second amended complaint. The motion in Cranston for leave to maintain the suit as a class action was not granted until October 20, 1967, the defendant again withdrawing his opposition[8] after plaintiffs' counsel requested a ruling on such motion on the third day of the resumed trial. (R. 1164; pp. 299-301)

The parties made no mention of the Herrington case, nor did they take any action to cause its transfer and consolidation with the Cranston suit. The Herringtons, moreover, were of the opinion that the Cranston suit would be dismissed, due to certain information provided by the plaintiff Cranston. The Herringtons took no action in their case until the defendant moved to dismiss Herrington, although they could have moved for judgment after 20 days. Defendant waited almost 50 days from October 18, 1967, before moving to dismiss and then contended that the Herringtons were in the plaintiffs' class in Cranston and could "participate" in that concluded case.

[8] Defendant insisted in Allen v. Freeman that a hearing should be held on the class action question at the earliest possible time, that 6,600 dairy farmers in various states were indispensable parties, and that they should all be notified before proceeding further. In the Blair v. Freeman supplementary proceedings, defendant demanded that 35,000 producers be notified thereof. Defendant vehemently contested matters that had previously been admitted, and there were no consents of any nature, other than those emanating from the plaintiffs therein.

The Herrington plaintiffs then filed a motion for summary judgment and/or mandamus, and their attorney was thereafter served with a "Notice of Motion" that advised that defendant would move the court the following morning for an order authorizing a delay in answering plaintiffs' motion until 20 days after the defendant's motion to dismiss had been ruled upon. Since the Notice of Motion was served in the late afternoon during counsel's absence from the office and he had other committments for the next morning, he advised the short motion's court and the office of defendant's counsel that he would not appear at the time noted in the Notice but would do so the next morning. The short motion's court would not hear defendant's motion under such circumstances, particularly since it was to be brought up as a preliminary matter and was not of an emergency nature. (R. 2423-83; Transcript, pp. 3-10, 1/8/68).

Instead of proceeding in the proper motion's court or waiting until the next morning when the Herringtons would oppose the motion, the defendant's attorney in Cranston proceeded in long motion's court in the Herrington case before a different judge and represented, in effect, that the motion was unopposed. The long motion's judge even inquired as to why counsel proceeded in his court on a preliminary matter, and he thereafter stated that he would not have signed defendant's proffered Order if he had known that the Herrington counsel desired to oppose such relief.

Further, in obtaining such order to delay the Herrington motion for summary judgment, defendant's counsel advised the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia on December 20, 1967, that the Herringtons could participate in the Cranston case, although the Cranston counsel was well awate that the trial had been concluded on October 27, 1967, almost two months previously:

> "The plaintiffs, who brought the suit here, if they would seek to do so under Rule 23 in our view, would be entitled to participate in that litigation. They have, however, come into this court seeking independent relief in this jurisdiction. Certain other people tried to intervene and were rejected, and apparently counsel raises some question that that denial applies to these particular plaintiffs. We believe they do not. • • •

It is noted that defendant and interveners thereafter opposed a subsequent attempt to reopen or participate in Cranston by petitioners.

After the filing of a motion to vacate (R. 2475), the Chief Judge directed defendant's counsel to appear before him the next morning. The Court had requested a transcript of the proceedings before the long motion's court, noted that such application took about 3 minutes, and admonished the defendant's counsel. The Court then vacated the said Order, including a scheduled hearing on the defendant's Secretary's motion to dismiss, and it directed the defendant to answer the Herrington motion for summary judgment. Defendant's counsel in the Cranston case pleaded the pendency of the Cranston case in the Northern District of New York but the Chief Judge for the District of Columbia exercised his discretion in ordering the defendant to answer the motion for summary judgment. Although defendant's counsel represented to the long motion's court on the previous day that defendant was desirous of a hearing on its own motion without undue delay, it was represented to short motion's court that 60 days was necessary for defendant to answer the Herrington motion for summary judgment. The defendant was granted a 30-day extension for the filing of such answer.

After failing to dismiss or stop the Herrington case and motion for summary judgment, the defendant then proceeded through the defendant-interveners in Cranston, who applied to that court for a temporary restraining order (R. 292) that would force the Herringtons and their attorney to withdraw the motion for summary judgment in order that defendant might avoid answering the same. Such application was made in chambers at New Haven, Conn., and also requested that the Herringtons and their attorney be required to move to suspend all proceedings in the Herrington case.

The restraining order was granted on December 29, 1967, and a hearing was scheduled at Syracuse, N.Y., on January 8, 1968 for a preliminary injunction. Prior to service of the restraining order, the Herringtons filed a Notice of taking of depositions, including that of defendant-interveners' attorney who had applied for the restraining order that would compel the suspension of proceedings in Herrington, including the taking of his deposition. Defendant in Herrington moved to vacate the Notice of taking of depositions, citing the Cranston retraining order, and the Herringtons filed opposition thereto on January 9, 1968, having theretofore filed an answer to the motion for preliminary injunction in the Cranston case. The Herrington attorney did not even know if he could appear in the Northern District of New York, for the defendant-interveners' counsel in Cranston contended that the said restraining order had been violated by virtue of the filing of opposition to defendant's motion to vacate the Notice of taking of depositions in Herrington. Such opposition had been filed on January 9, 1968, more than 10 days after the issuance of the restraining order and prior to notice of the extension thereof, but the preliminary injunction was thereafter issued on January 16, 1968. It ordered the withdrawal of the Herrington motion for summary judgment by January 19th, one day before the defendant was required to file his answer thereto, and it also ordered the plaintiff Cranston and his attorney to take such action in the Herrington case if Herrington and his attorney failed to do so. Under the circumstances and in view of the fact that the Herringtons could ill afford either fine or jail, the Herringtons involuntarily complied with the Cranston injunction that overruled the specific order of the Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.[9]

In respect to the motion for preliminary injunction, to which Herrington had submitted written opposition[10]

[9] Such motions to withdraw and suspend would presumably have been filed by the Cranston plaintiffs through defendant's or interveners' associated counsel who were stationed in the clerk's office on January 19, 1968.

[10] Although the Herrington answer to the motion for preliminary injunction had informed the Cranston court of the need for depositions and had requested the Cranston court to investigate such matters if they were prevented from doing so, the Court made no inquiry whatsoever in this connection.

(R. 558), the Court stated as follows:

> "The Court is going to grant the motion for a preliminary injunction, without giving detailed reasons for it. A clear showing has been made for the relief therein sought, and the motion, accordingly, is granted." (R. 1169; p. 24)

Counsel for defendant-interveners also prepared the preliminary injunction and order that was signed by the district court on January 16, 1968, the temporary restraining order being extended on January 8, 1968 for another 10 days by endorsement on the margin and without enumeration of any reasons therefor. (R. 390) Appeals were noted from said orders but the Clerk informed that he was unable to take any action thereon because the file was in the possession of the presiding judge in New Haven, Conn. (R. 282) Counsel believed that the record would be returned in sufficient time for the transmittal thereof to the Court of Appeals, and he thereafter applied for an extension of time for the filing and docketing of the record on appeal. This motion was denied as untimely, being received one day late, and the court's order stated that such appellants did not raise any substantial questions as to the correctness of said orders from which appeals were noted. Said Order of April 5, 1968, further stated that appellant Duncan was a member of the plaintiffs' class and was "adequately represented by the plaintiff's". (R. 585, 670, 695)

On March 26, 1968, prior to the aforesaid Order of April 5, 1968 denying an extension of time for docketing and filing of the record for said appeals, Leonard Duncan, et al., non-nearby dairy farmers who reside near Troy, N.Y., and market their milk under the Connecticut order, sought to intervene in the district court under Rule 24, FRCP, or to otherwise enter the action under Rule 23, FRCP, relating to class actions. They questioned the adequacy of representation of the plaintiff's class and raised issues as to the collusive nature of the suit in seeking discovery and depositions or dismissal of the suit with protection of the escrow fund. Sixteen other non-nearby dairy farmers who had requested the district court to grant such relief joined in the appeals from the lower court's orders and judgment denying such relief, and over 40 joined in this petition to this Court. The Duncan motion requested the Court to enter the dismissal of the suit if certain charges concerning the solicitation of the case, collusion, etc., were not denied, in that the parties had failed to deny the same on at least three prior occasions.

In spite of the pendency of said motion, the aforesaid Order of April 5, 1968 stated that plaintiffs were adequately representing their class, and the parties failed to file any response to Duncan's motion within the required period or otherwise. After supplementing the pleading attached to the motion to intervene with various affidavits (R. 731; 848, 850, 857, 859, 861), and after submitting a proposed Order (R. 796) when no response was filed thereto, the petitioners filed a motion for summary judgment. (R. 798) Opposition was then filed by the parties from 40 to 45 days after the filing of said motion for intervention and attached pleading or motion to dismiss, but the Court failed to even rule on any of the petitioners' aforesaid motions.

On April 22, 1968, however, the district court issued an order upon unidentified "requests" of the parties' attorneys to provide for the mailing of Notices concerning the action to about 2,100 producers by April 24, 1968. The Order directed the Market Administrator in Hartford, Conn., to furnish the names and addresses of producers to counsel for plaintiffs and interveners, but not to the petitioners or their counsel, although it is difficult to perceive how such names and addresses could be furnished to counsel located in Troy, N.Y., by said date and particularly when the Court issuing the Order was sitting in the Southern District of New York on April 22, 1968.

The said Notice advised dairy farmers for the first time of a suit that had been filed 15 months previously and of a trial that had been concluded 6 months prior to the notice. Although the decision in Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 319 F.2d 555, was cited as the basis for the Order, it is clear that the posture of the suit precluded any participation therein by the non-nearby producers. The notice was also a show cause order that directed any dairy farmer who questioned the adequacy of representation to advise the Court, the U.S. Attorney, and the respective attorneys for the parties of such fact in writing on or before May 9, 1968, and to appear on May 15, 1968, at Albany, N.Y., "to show cause as to the precise manner in which their interests are or may be different from others similarly situated or in which their interests are not being fairly and adequately represented by existing counsel." The Notice further stated that any such dairy farmer "should be prepared to submit probative evidence or testimony under oath at the hearing, subject to cross-examination, to support his claim." The Notice advised that, "To facilitate a full and ample opportunity for all recipients of this notice who so desire, to familiarize themselves with the proceedings to date, the complete record of those proceedings has been deposited in the chambers of the United States District Judge, located in the Federal Building, Albany, New York. This record is available for public inspection during normal business hours."

The Notice informed that the farmers desiring to question the adequacy of the representation could present only such witnesses as the district court might determine to be required, the names of such witnesses to be furnished and good cause demonstrated for their presence subject to objection thereto by any interested party. The Notice further informed that the plaintiff Cranston and counsel for the parties would be present for questioning by the court or by counsel for good cause shown, but it failed to inform that petitioners would have to make the parties and counsel the petitioners' witnesses if they desired to examine them.

The petitioners advised that they needed to take depositions and obtain discovery in order to prepare for said hearing and that some witnesses were not subject to the court's jurisdiction. They filed extensive objections to the contemplated procedure and hearing, termed an "alternative" to discovery and depositions by the parties, and their subsequent involuntary participation in the hearings was under objection and without waiver of any rights or relief previously requested by them (R. 888, 906)

Further, the Order of the lower court of April 22, 1968, stated that the entire record was then at Albany and available for review as of that date. Petitioners' counsel traveled 800 miles round-trip to examine said record on May 1, 1968, but the record had never been sent to Albany. He again traveled to Albany a second time for said purpose, but he was able to review the record only after persistent inquiry and then only for 25 minutes because of the unavailability of an Ass't U.S. Attorney to watch as the record was being examined. In spite of such admitted facts, the district court's decision attempts to excuse this inaccuracy in its Order by maintaining that the court "is completely satisfied that all who desired to examine the record were aware of its availability after May 9, 1968 and had ample opportunity to study it. No prejudice resulted from the delay." Much of the record was never even entered on the docket until after the District Court's decision of August 2, 1968.

Although petitioners' counsel made several inquiries concerning the location of the record, he was never advised when the record was finally sent to Albany. He ascertained this during the hearing on May 15, 1968, and it is clear that there was no real opportunity to review the record for said hearing. The first date that the record was allegedly available for review was May 10, 1968, a Friday, and counsel could not travel to Albany on said date and have any time to review the record. The record was supposedly available on only May 13 and 14, 1968, and petitioners' counsel was never advised of its availability on those dates, being advised of its location during the hearing of May 15, 1968, and thereafter being denied opportunity to examine the same except for 20-25 minutes when he again traveled 800 miles to review said record to prepare for the second collusion hearing on May 27, 1968, the last collusion hearing being held on June 10, 1968, under the District Court's unusual procedure.

At least 90 percent of those farmers in the locality of the suit who were aware of the same requested the district court to dismiss the action. Farmers in other localities who did not know the plaintiffs or their counsel would surely have joined in such requests if the relevant facts had been furnished to them. The farmers had to proceed by word of mouth in the immediate area, and a meeting prior to the hearing by unselected and unsolicited non-nearby dairy farmers was condemend as a "rump group" by plaintiff and his counsel, who never informed such farmers of the pendency of the suit or the other matters relevant to its maintenance as a class action.

Petitioners were limited to direct examination at the hearings if they wished to question a party or his counsel, and the counsel could even examine his own client thereafter by leading questions to establish that which was desired. The Court asked no questions of the parties or their counsel and did not even require Attorney Conard to submit a statement, let alone testify, although the Court did examine a dairy farmer in an ineffective attempt to question his testimony that he had never met or communicated with the named plaintiffs' attorney and did not know that he had been listed for 15 months as a named plaintiff representing a class of dairy farmers who were unaware of the pendency of such suit wherein the trial had been concluded 6 months previously.

The district court entered orders by margin endorsement on August 2, 1968, date of its judgment, denying the motion to intervene or to otherwise enter the action, the taking of discovery and depositions, dismissal of the suit, and petitioners' motion for summary judgment. It entered judgment for the Secretary and defendant-interveners on the merits, dismissing the named plaintiffs' Complaint and holding that the nearby differentials were authorized by the Act; that they were not trade barriers or illegally discriminatory, and that the promulgation thereof was supported by substantial evidence in the administrative record. The district court's judgment of August 2, 1968, also reaffirmed the class action orders that had allowed the individual plaintiffs and defendant-interveners to represent other dairy farmers similarly situated.

Upon entry of the District Court's judgment and decision of August 2, 1968, in the Cranston case, the associate counsel of Attorney Conard in the Allen case and the Secretary's attorneys filed said decision in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in the pending Allen case and contended that the "trial" and decision in Cranston should cause the reversal of the District Court's Allen judgment by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. However, that Court affirmed the lower court's judgment in Allen and indicated in its decision of September 23, 1968, its disagreement with the Cranston District Court decision.

The parties in Cranston thereupon delayed the filing of the joint appendix and the plaintiff-appellants' brief in the Second Circuit for approximately a year; thus preserving a conflict which might otherwise have been eliminated if the parties had proceeded in normal course and if the Second Circuit had reversed the District Court. Attorney Conard and his associates in the Allen case and the Secretary's counsel urged the granting of their respective petitions for a writ of certiorari in respect to Allen on the basis of the aforesaid conflict with the Cranston decision and this Court did grant such writ. 394 U.S. 958.

The parties in Cranston thereafter sought expedited argument in the Second Circuit, and its decision was held in abeyance pending this Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen. However, these petitioners were not allowed any oral argument whatsoever on the appeals they prosecuted in Cranston and which had been consolidated with the appeals of the named plaintiffs in Cranston with provision for the issuance of a single mandate in Nos. 32793-796, the named plaintiffs' appeals, and Nos. 32797-799, the appeals of petitioners from the orders of the District Court.

After issuance of this Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen on December 9, 1969, the parties and the petitioners filed numerous memoranda in the Court of Appeals in Cranston in respect to the applicability of the Zuber v. Allen decision to the Cranston case. The Secretary and defendant-interveners were finally forced by petitioners' memoranda to admit that this Court's decision applied and required reversal of the District Court's decision, and the Secretary further admitted that the nearby differential would have to be terminated and the escrowing stopped thereunder. He acknowledged on April 1, 1970, after consideration of various proposals for continuing the nearby differential on a different basis, that none of such proposals were appropriate subjects for an administrative hearing and that, "In the circumstances, any request for continued escrowing would serve no useful purpose, and therefore the Secretary withdraws the previous request for continued escrowing". (Supplemental Memorandum of Secretary, 4/1/70, p. 2).

On April 26, 1970, however, the nearby producers sought further delay and continuation of the escrowing in contending that the nearby differentials should be

"phased out" over a minimum one-year period, the contention apparently being that the illegal nearby differential would gradually become less illegal as the exactions were made in successfully lesser amounts from petitioners and other non-nearby producers.[11]

On July 16, 1970, the Second Circuit issued its judgment and per curiam decision based solely on this

[11] That contention is again being made in the Court of Appeals by counsel for both the named plaintiffs, who rarely disputed Attorney Conard's proposals unless forced to do so by the filings of these petitioners, and the said attorney for the nearby producers, and they jointly proposed such a judgment to the District Court in the usual private proceedings herein. In stating that the non-nearby producers would receive "the entire escrow fund" after deduction of attorneys' fees and expenses or an amount "in excess of $500,000", the nearby producers' counsel who was paid for his services in losing the case asserts the qualification that, "This assumes that total counsel fees awarded will amount to less than $500,000." (Motion For Supplementation of this Court's Decision of July 16, 1970", pg. 13, ftnt. 3, 11/5/70). Counsel for the named plaintiffs and the defendant-interveners neglect to advise that the amount disbursed to the non-nearby producers under their poposal would be eaten up through continuation of the nearby differential over an extended period (and further extensions thereafter on one pretext or another without opposition), and that the claimed entry of additional milk from new non-nearby producers would result in larger nearby differential payments than heretofore under such new differential, even at reduced rates, and would also cause such non-nearby producers to bear the burden of any surplus caused by an influx of milk of additional non-nearby producers. They also fail to advise that such milk supplies can be largely regulated and manipulated by the Connecticut Milk Producers Association composed almost entirely of nearby producers and by the sanitary health regulations of Connecticut for the benefit of nearby producers.

Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen and concluded as follows:

> "In view of the Zuber decision, the judgment below is reversed and the case remanded to the District Court for such proceedings, including the proper disposition of funds held in escrow during the proceedings and costs and related matters, and the entry of judgment thereon as may be appropriate in the light of Zuber."

On August 5, 1970, the District Court entered an Order restraining the Secretary from terminating the nearby differential pending a hearing on the motion of Attorney Conard to "phase out" the nearby differential as aforesaid. Docket entries of the District Court disclose that a "Pre-Trial Conference (1½ hr.)" was held on August 25, 1970, and the hearing on said motion was continued from September 10, 1970 to September 23, 1970. Upon discovery that petitioners' dairy farmer representative and one of their counsel had ascertained the existence of such hearing and were in the courtroom, the parties thereupon succeeded in removing the hearing to chambers, and both petitioners' representative and counsel were denied permission to sit in on said hearing. However, they later ascertained that action on said motion was continued to October 14, 1970, the last day for petitioners to seek a writ of certiorari from this Court concerning the matters complained of in the Cranston case.

On October 8, 1970, however, the Honorable Mr. Justice Harlan of this Court granted the motion of these petitioners for an extension of time for filing such petition until December 12, 1970. Upon being apprised thereof, the parties then filed dual motions for supplementation of the decision of the Second Circuit, and further delaying tactics are being pursued in that Court in order to continue to build up the escrow fund through continued escrowing for the primary benefit of the parties' attorneys and in the hope that these petitioners will be judicially excluded from this case by denial of their petition for a writ of certiorari in the interim.

Although the Secretary has recently filed a memorandum in the Court of Appeals following the petitioners' arguments that the District Court has no jurisdiction to act in the administrator's stead in rewriting and extending an illegal administrative regulation, we are of the respectful view that the Secretary may not have taken such position if petitioners had not pursued their rights and that the transcript of the last hearing in the District Court discloses that the Government was straddling the fence in this connection in purporting to contend that the District Court had no jurisdiction as aforesaid but also to indicate that it otherwise favored such proposed judgment and was undecided concerning an appeal even if the District Court ruled that it could rewrite and extend the illegal nearby differential. It is clear, however, that the Government would not oppose the attorneys' fees or lack of notice to dairy farmers in respect thereto except after the fact and that the petitioning dairy farmers remain the roadblock in this litigation in which the counsel for the named plaintiffs and defendant-interveners claim petitioners are not parties and not entitled to be heard, served with any pleadings, or notified of the private proceedings affecting their interests.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether this suit could be maintained as a class action or otherwise when the record conclusively shows that the plaintiff Cranston was admittedly solicited to bring this suit after another farmer was thrice approached by the opposition for such purpose but not recontacted when he indicated that he desired to consult his own attorney rather than have one appointed for him; was not allowed to contact his present attorney until after he was "checked out" by the opposing counsel for the nearby producers and the Connecticut Milk Producers composed almost entirely of nearby producers; was transported by such opposing counsel and a nearby producer to the office of his present counsel for his first meeting therewith concerning institution of this suit, the attorney initially recommended for plaintiff by opposing counsel having served as associate counsel for the nearby producers in this suit; admittedly did not notify any producers other than the named plaintiffs of the suit either prior or subsequent to the trial thereof, two of said named plaintiffs not knowing that they had been listed as named plaintiffs for 15 months and one having testified that he had never met or communicated with plaintiffs' attorney, the latter admitting the same; retired from dairy farming prior to the District Court's decision without informing the Court of the same; was not liable for any attorney fee or expenses of this case, in that the named plaintiffs' attorney was to be paid a reasonable fee if plaintiffs lost this case, the CMPA admittedly having maintained this suit in the names of the three defendant nearby producers and having done so in the case of Zuber v. Allen, 396 U.S. 168, without any such financial arrangement with plaintiffs' counsel in that case wherein it resorted to numerous unfair and improper tactics to prevent adequacy of representation of non-nearby producers, including improper tactics to financially prejudice the presentation of the non-nearby producers' case therein.

2. Whether the petitioners were denied adequacy of representation and due process of law by virtue of the aforesaid action and others during the litigation, including but not limited to refusal to rule on petitioners' motions or to allow them to take depositions and discovery and actually enjoining petitioners therefrom when petitioners sought to question the validity of this suit.

3. Whether counsel for the private opposing parties, both of whom lost this case, the decision of the District Court being reversed solely on the basis of this Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen in a Per Curiam opinion, are eligible to seek any compensation from the escrow fund in this case in view of the factors herein bearing on its validity, and also when the attorney for the nearby producers and CMPA was paid by the latter for his services herein and the attorney for the named plaintiffs was guaranteed a reasonable fee and expenses by the CMPA as a volunteer, or whether the escrow fund should be disbursed to petitioners and other non-nearby dairy farmers without such deductions either at the direction of this Court or under the case of Herrington v. Freeman, C.A. No. 2861-67, pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, with expenses and fee for these petitioners therefrom.

4. Whether the admittedly illegal nearby differential may be rewritten, enlarged and continued for at least another year after repeatedly frivolous delays under a jointly proposed judgment of counsel for the nearby and non-nearby parties in private proceedings in the District Court and under which those attorneys would obtain a minimum of $500,000 or about 50% of the escrow fund for alleged services in this suit which rendered the Zuber

v. Allen case much more difficult for the plaintiff nonnearby producers therein and thus for these petitioners to prevail herein.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. This case should not only warrant the attention of this Court because of the need for rectifying a gross departure by the District Court from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings and the sanction of such departure by the Court of Appeals, presumably because it reversed the District Court on the merits and thus gave little consideration to the collusive and other disabling aspects of this suit, but also because the failure to act in respect to this particular case would constitute an open invitation to the institution of similar collusive suits in the future involving large issues or even governmental programs and would thus effectively prevent the average citizen from filing, maintaining and controlling an independent bona fide suit in the exercise of and for the protection of his constitutional rights. The failure to grant this petition would not only cause such citizens to feel that it would be fruitless to attempt to assert or protect their basic rights but would also encourage those who have denied those rights to continue to do so in the future with impunity and with the realization that they might even be financially enriched through denial of another's right to elementary due process and fair play. In this connection, the Court need but note that the failure of the lower court to take any action in regard to the gross improprieties that permeate the institution and maintenance of this suit has resulted in the present joint efforts of supposedly opposing counsel to rewrite and extend an administrative regulation which they admit is illegal and also to enrich themselves in the process through continued escrowing and the private seizure of approximately $500,000 or about 50% of the escrow fund for losing performances in a suit which was clearly collusive as a matter of law and otherwise and intended to affect the disposition of Zuber v. Allen, 396 U.S. 168, and its multi-million dollar escrow fund through replacement of relevant administrative records by the inaccurate testimony of interested witnesses in an otherwise unnecessary alleged trial in the District Court. Even now the parties propose another "limited trial" in the District Court for the purpose of continuing and rewriting an admittedly illegal nearby differential on the basis of testimony of the same interested witnesses. Such result is further demonstrated by the open assertions of the parties that intentional frivolous delay to postpone their proposed disposition of the escrow fund and a decision by the District Court in regard to rewriting and continuation of the nearby differential will prevent this Court from granting this petition, and it is also shown by the ready admissions of the parties that they will employ inconsistent swiftness in the District Court to disburse the escrow fund to the involved private attorneys upon the granting of certiorari to moot this aspect of the case in this Court.

2. This case presents an unusual opportunity to this Court to enable the average citizen to reaffirm his faith in our courts and judicial system under which the rights of such citizens are equal to those of any organization, particularly in class actions affecting thousands of individuals and a vast part of the country, and not subject to political or other influences as in administrative proceedings in some instances. It is one of the few cases involving a segment of our economic life whose labor and devotion to small individual enterprise are readily recognized and who have always sought to protect and preserve the principles upon which this Court functions. Although not allowed even oral argument in the lower court and grossly handicapped by the unusual rulings and actions of the District Court, the petitioners are of the respectful opinion that a mere reading of the limited testimony set forth in Appendix A hereto will disclose that this suit is clearly collusive under the holding of this Court in Gardner v. Goodyear, 131 U.S. Appendix ciii, the pertinent part thereof being found at page 41 of this petition. This case could also be utilized by this Court to indicate to both the bar and the government that the standards set forth in that case have not been eroded by time or otherwise and that this Court expects the same fair and proper conduct from the members of the bar and the government, the presence of the latter in this suit maximizing rather than minimizing the improprieties therein.

3. The parties below, although admitting the applicability of this Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen, 396 U.S. 168, and the illegality of the nearby differential, are seeking to avoid the same through a misrepresentation of that decision, particularly in respect to the parts thereof which noted that neither the administrator nor the court could act in the other's stead and that the nearby differential should be deleted rather than enlarged and continued. The holding of this Court is also pertinent in regard to the present joint actions of the parties' counsel who have repeatedly sought in every conceivable procedural manner to continue the escrowing under an illegal differential for their own primary financial benefit, in that this Court's decision concluded as follows:

> "Less losing parties be encouraged to prolong litigation by frivolous appeals in order to reap a windfall, we think respondents deserve the fruits of their victory as of the date of final judgment at trial."

In the present case, the monies escrowed were solely those of the non-nearby petitioners, amounting to about 44-cents per hundred pounds of milk marketed in Connecticut, and the escrow order was entered by consent, the nearby producers admitting that the minimal amount of 2-cents per cwt. they received from the nearby differential was too insignificant to really affect their milk price, and the disbursement of the escrow fund to non-nearby producers is dictated by many other factors not present in Zuber v. Allen.

ARGUMENT

This suit is collusive as a matter of law because of the fact that payment of expenses and fees of plaintiffs' counsel was to be made by the opposition if the plaintiffs lost the suit. It is obvious that delayed payment only increases the control inherent in the situation to the very conclusion of the case. The lower court's opinion fails to mention the leading case of Gardner v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 131 U.S. Appendix ciii, which held that a suit was collusive as a matter of law even where the involved attorneys did not know that payment of their respective fees emanated from the same party. The Cranston opinion stresses the lack of control over the plaintiffs' case, but this Court has rejected both the "control" criterion and the "reimbursement" theory relied upon by the lower court. There can be no reimbursement of the plaintiffs in any event when they are admittedly not responsible for any expenses or fees and have no agreement of any nature with their attorney in this regard. This Court clearly stated the applicable rule in the Goodyear case:

> "The company, however, paid the counsel employed for the defense as well as for themselves in the Circuit Court and subsequently in this Court. These facts appear from the record and the admissions of the company, in the 9th Article of their Answer to the motion to dismiss the appeal. They are the only facts which we think it necessary to notice.
> It may be that the company has not become the legal or equitable owners of the > opposing interests involved in the suit. There may be, and doubtless are, large opposing interests, of which they are neither the legal or equitable owners. But it cannot be admitted that one party to a suit can pay the fees of counsel on both sides, both in the court below and on appeal, without being held to have such control over both the preparation and argument of the cause, as to make the suit merely collusive in both courts.

> It can make no difference that the counsel fees were charged to the party apparently, though not really, liable to pay them, and payment of the other party procured through him. This, indeed, is a circumstance against the party who pays the fees, rather than in his favor."

In support of their citation of the Goodyear case and the clear command of the Supreme Court therein, the petitioners set forth the statement of the counsel in Goodyear in responding to the motion to dismiss that suit on appeal, that suit being far less violative of the rights of those involved therein than of the petitioners in this suit:

> "The counsel who signed the answer to this motion, made a most careful and conscientious examination of the facts before the answer was drawn. They believed then, and they believe now, that the statements contained in it are exactly true, and that they are susceptible of the amplest proof.

They now learn that the fact, stated in the 9th clause of that answer, that during the latter part of the preparation and the argument of the cause the counsel for the defendant were paid by the Complainant seems to the Court, of itself, sufficient ground for the dismissal of the appeal.

It was the opinion of the Counsel, in submitting the answer, that if the integrity, fair dealing, complete preparation of the defense and entire absence of collusion were made to "appear in proof, as alleged in the said 9th clause; the motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied, notwithstanding the payment of Counsel which the Court seems to disapprove.

But they think that the question presented is not one which they ought to argue. It is a question of propriety and good practice; and upon such a question whatever may be their own opinion, they do not think it becoming in them as Officers of this Court to advise it. It is enough for them to know that the Court doubts.

Under such circumstances while they deeply regret that by this disposition of the case, the refutation upon the record of the charges made against counsel will become impossible, they do not think it proper to contest with the Court the dismissal of the appeal.

> They therefore waive the fact that the motion is promoted by the same persons who, with full knowledge of all the facts, aided in promoting the appeal, and the further fact that the appeal was determined at a term of the Court now past, and, with full confidence that, when a cause based on the same patent comes here again, the integrity of the present record will be completely vindicated, they submit the question of dismissal to the judgment of the Court without argument."

The petitioners respectfully submit that the door to fraud is opened wide when the opposition solicits the case and the plaintiffs, approves opposing counsel, and offers to pay the fees and expenses of opposing counsel if the case is lost. The record reveals that CMPA officials and attorneys with financial interests in this suit committed the aforesaid acts, and the action of such CMPA officials and attorneys in Blair and Allen discloses that they attempted to preclude any representation of its non-nearby members' position in that litigation.

The petitioners respectfully submit that the record below is abundantly clear that the solicitation of this suit by the Connecticut attorneys and "nearby" interests involved in the Blair and Allen cases took place shortly after January 11, 1967, when Judge Matthews granted the preliminary injunction in Allen, the same being entered on January 16, 1967.

The witness Alexander Marbot testified that he was solicited to bring this suit in the District of Connecticut on three different days within a period of one week prior to January 27, 1967, the date on which plaintiff Cranston was contacted for the same purpose after Mr. Marbot expressed doubt concerning the true motives of the CMPA intermediary (Blakely) and advised that he desired to consult his own attorney before agreeing to file such a suit. (A. 7-8).

There is nothing in the record to dispute the fact that Cranston was contacted by the witness John Seremet after the latter had conferred with attorney Frederick U. Conard, Jr., counsel for defendant-interveners and CMPA, and Louis Longo, owner of a large "nearby" farm in Connecticut and president of the CMPA, concerning the contacting of such prospective plaintiff. (A. 10-12, 22, 26). Moreover, Mr. Cranston admitted that he and the other two original named plaintiffs consulted Attorney Weatherwax after receiving Seremet's telephone call. (A. 17-18).

The former CMPA official (John Seremet) who contacted plaintiff Cranston freely admitted that he contacted Cranston for the purpose of instituting a suit. (A. 10) and he positively did not testify that he "had heard rumors" that Cranston intended to commence a suit, as stated in the Cranston opinion. Moreover, this individual knew of no meeting of the CMPA that preceded or authorized his contacting of Mr. Cranston (A. 12-13), although he did testify that Attorney Conard previously gave him the name of an attorney to represent the prospective plaintiffs prior to the contacting of Cranston. (A. 10-11). Although the Cranston opinion states that the CMPA "checked out" the Cranston plaintiff's present attorney because they wanted "good attorneys on both sides of the question", the record discloses that it was opposing counsel Conard that checked out plaintiff's attorney (A.11), and the Cranston opinion fails to note that the attorney initially recommended by Attorney Conard to act as plaintiffs' counsel had no experience in the specialized field of milk marketing litigation and that he has acted as Conard's associate counsel in the Cranston case. (A. 10-12). Additionally, the record reflects that the prospective plaintiffs were not allowed to consult their present attorney for the purpose of instituting the Cranston suit until after opposing counsel Conard checked out Cranston's present attorney. (A. 12). [12]

The Cranston opinion refers to a "meeting between CMPA officials, plaintiffs and Attorney Weatherwax" that occurred on February 3, 1967, but it fails to note that Attorney Conard and Louis Longo, CMPA president who owns a large "nearby" farm, traveled from Hartford, Connecticut, to the home of Cranston at Troy, N.Y., on "an icy, freezing morning" on February 3, 1967, "for the purpose of discussing the bringing of this suit." (T. 349). (A. 19-20, 22).

The Cranston opinion also fails to mention that Attorney Conard transported the three prospective plaintiffs to Attorney Weatherwax's office for their first consultation concerning the institution of the Cranston suit on February 3, 1967 (A. 19), or that Mr. Longo had admitted he would be affected financially by the elimination of the nearby differential. (A. 28). There is no plausible reason in the record for such trip to Cranston's home or for the transporting of the initial three prospective plaintiffs to the office of attorney Weatherwax on said date, particularly when the parties maintain that Cranston was already represented by Mr. Weatherwax and the latter had been "checked out" by attorney Conard.

[12] Contrary to the statement in the District Court's opinion that Cranston had been against the nearby differential, the record discloses that he tried to expand it to cover his own farm as recently as 1966. (A. 6-7).

The Cranston opinion also fails to note that at least 90 percent of the non-nearby dairy farmers who became aware of the factors permeating the Cranston suit requested its dismissal.[13] The plaintiff Cranston admitted that he had not advised any other producers of that suit, either prior or subsequent to its institution (A. 2), and the opinion fails to indicate such fact or that Mr. Cranston sold his cows after the trial and retired from the dairy business. (A. 7). The Cranston opinion states that the CMPA decided to "aid" its members by "reimbursing such members for reasonable expenses and attorney fees", but all four of the individual plaintiffs testified that they had no liability for either expenses or attorney fees and reimbursement therefor can hardly exist under such circumstances. (A. 5, 21, 23-25).

The Cranston opinion fails to note that Attorney Conard was associated with petitioners' counsel in the Blair and Allen cases on the side of the nearby producers and nearby differential, and that every attempt had been made in Allen to preclude the presentation of the non-nearby producers' case, including appearance in court on various matters with little or no notice to [13] The District Court's decision is also incorrect in stating that there were 3,000 nearby producers and 250 non-nearby producers, in that there were only about 1,800 nearby producers and only about 90 non-nearby producers. About half of the latter are petitioners, and most of the rest know nothing of this case because located in other areas.

opposing counsel and attempts to prejudice the non-nearby producers by improper financial pressures – such as refusal to print relevant portions of the record and efforts to force non-nearby producers to bear an unfair part of the expenses of the nearby producers' appeal. In view of the fact that the CMPA admittedly acted in the names of the individual nearby producers in both Allen and the Cranston case, it is submitted that the contrasting treatment in the two cases does not support the statement in the Cranston opinion that the payment of expenses and attorney fees of opposing counsel in Cranston is attributable to the fact that the CMPA is a "democratic" organization. Additionally, Attorney Conard has vehemently opposed the entry of any unselected non-nearby producer or unapproved attorney into the Cranston case, and no non-nearby dairy farmer has been able to intervene therein even for the purpose of taking depositions or discovery.

The Cranston opinion also fails to note that the collusion hearings disclosed that two of the six individual plaintiffs did not even know that they had been listed as plaintiffs (A. 3), and one such listed plaintiff was unable to identify the plaintiffs' counsel in Cranston, further testifying that he had never met or communicated with Attorney Weatherwax, and the latter admitted that this was true (A. 3) in spite of his earlier representation to the Court during the trial:

> "MR. WEATHERWAX: The Court please, I had anticipated named plaintiffs Roy Ottman and George Mesick, Jr., would be here to testify today, but both have illnesses in their homes and were unable to be here. So I have just verified that fact, so I will not be able to produce their testimony today, and I will not produce it any any time, for that matter, as I feel perhaps that the testimony of the other named plaintiffs will probably be sufficient for the purposes for which their testimony was offered.

THE COURT: That is Ottman and Mesick, those are the two plaintiffs you mentioned?

MR. WEATHERWAX: Yes. * * *." (R. 1163, pp. 118-119)

Although it is absolutely incredible that attorney Weatherwax could expect these two alleged plaintiffs to be present to testify at the trial when he admittedly had never spoken to them concerning this suit, that assertion pales by comparison with the lower court's findings and opinion which state that Ottman and Mesick brought this suit but are being allowed to withdraw as individual plaintiffs.

The Notice of said collusion hearing failed to advise dairy farmers of the matters alleged by applicants for intervention and was actually a show cause order that was worded in such a manner that it could only serve to dissuade any dairy farmer from challenging the Cranston suit. Such farmers had to take the stand subject to cross-examination but the attorneys were not even required to submit a signed statement to the Court, and no question was asked of Attorney Conard or any of the parties by the district court. The petitioners' main witness testified for 14 pages of the record but was cross-examined for 54 pages of the record. The president of CMPA, Louis Longo, who owns a large "nearby" farm in Connecticut, testified for 33 pages of the record for the parties, but the petitioners' counsel was interrupted after 5 pages of cross-examination and asked how much longer he was going to take. The hearings on collusion did not adequately treat this subject, and the petitioners advised that important witnesses were outside the jurisdiction of the court. The district court had also required the petitioners to submit the names of all intended witnesses and its order provided that it would determine if their presence was necessary after objection thereto by the parties, the said Order further providing that the court would question the witnesses in the first instance.

Although the Cunston opinion states that all aspects of the claim of collusion were explored and every interested person given an opportunity to be heard, the petitioners were not allowed to take depositions or discovery, and they could not examine any of the parties or counsel in Cunston without making the same their own witnesses. They were not allowed to ask any questions of a witness concerning the merits of the case, even to illustrate the inaccuracy of the testimony of such witness.

Although the plaintiffs' counsel in Cunston presented no witnesses, other than the minimal testimony of the four plaintiffs during the trial, the plaintiffs did not file any motion for summary judgment or even a motion to hold that case in abeyance pending a decision on the Allen appeals. Copies of both motions and the Blair and Allen briefs were furnished to the Cunston plaintiffs.

A second main point relevant to the questions of solicitation and collusion relates to the manner in which the defendant and interveners replaced and supplemented the testimony in the administrative records upon which the Secretary had promulgated his findings and decisions concerning the nearby differential, and this fact is also relevant in respect to the inability of petitioners to examine the trial record prior to the collusion hearing or to question any witness concerning the merits during the collusion hearing.

The Ounston opinion refers primarily to the CHPA but the complaining dairy farmers in Ounston alleged that the suit was conceived and instigated by the same attorneys that represented the nearby interests in Blair and Allen. They further alleged that the "trial" in Ounston was for the purpose of overcoming the admissions in Blair that the "market differential" was correctly defined in the Congressional Reports and could not formulate a basis for the issuance of the nearby farm location differential. The only witnesses who testified in Ounston in this regard were Attorney Reuben Hall, who was associated with Attorney Conard in Blair and Allen as counsel for the CHPA and NEMPA, personnel from the USDA, and the witness Kane. The latter's testimony rested upon a 1935 draft of proposed revisions to the Act that was never produced to substantiate his testimony because of the obvious inconsistency between his testimony and said draft. The testimony of the other witnesses that attempted to cast doubt on the Congressional definition of the market differential can only be viewed as fantastic, in that the defined market differential admittedly existed in the very area of the Ounston trial both prior and subsequent to federal regulation. In spite of this fact and the presence of the market differential in both the Connecticut and the Mass.-Rhode Island milk orders as a part of the zone differential, 7 C.F.R. 1015.62, 1001.62, the Ounston opinion fails to recognize that the market differential is included in said orders, and the decision rests on the incredible testimony of such interested attorneys and governmental personnel who allegedly "knew of no differentials which would in any way fit the definition of market differentials contained in the reports."

In this connection, it is noted that Attorney Weatherwax filed a brief for 24 handlers or dealers in the 1956 N.Y.-N.J. administrative hearings that dealt solely with the market or direct-delivery differentials payable in the secondary markets of Upstate New York, but said brief was never introduced in the Ounston trial to rebut the testimony that the market or direct-delivery differential did not exist in such secondary markets.

Also, attorney Weatherwax never advised petitioners' counsel that there was to be a trial of more than one day's duration below or that the bulk of the testimony was to relate to the Boston milk order involved in Allen.[14] Moreover, the petitioners note that virtually nothing from the early administrative records was included in the joint appendix below, although the opinion of the District Court purports to be based on a determination that the Connecticut nearby differential is legal because the 1937 Greater Boston Order nearby differential is allegedly legal. This conclusion rests on the testimony of attorney Reuben Hall, counsel for the CMPA, NEMPA

[14] Petitioners' counsel also represented the plaintiffs-non-nearby dairy farmers in the Blair, Allen and Harrington cases, and the introduction of testimony and evidence in Ounston concerning the Boston milk order differential involved in the Allen case could have affected the disposition of that then pending case and escrow fund of $10 million.

and smaller associations in both the Blair case and the Allen case, and to a much lesser extent upon the testimony of witness Donald Kane, also a former attorney, and it is significant that the brief filed by plaintiffs in the District Court appeared to accept much of attorney Hall's testimony as factual and actually lauded said witness, failing to ever bring out that said attorney was associated with attorney Conard in the Blair and Allen cases. The impression was left below that Mr. Hall was simply a disinterested and expert witness who had no particular desire to see one side or the other prevail in this suit.

Further, attorney Weatherwax had not read the administrative record prior to the trial on October 18, 1967, although this was an obvious necessity for any proper representation of the plaintiffs during trial.

Of additional significance in this regard is that defendant's counsel also withdrew filed opposition to the maintenance of the Cunston suit as a class action after the filing of the Hennington case, and he affirmatively sought the granting of the motion for a class action order in Cunston after having vehemently opposed such an order in the Allen case. These inconsistent actions speak for themselves, as does the action of attorney Conard in consenting to the class action motion of plaintiffs and the motion for a preliminary injunction that would result in the escrowing of the differential payments. Two similar motions in the Allen case were opposed by counsel for CMPA and defendant-interveners represented by the CMPA therein.

Petitioners respectfully submit that the record discloses that this suit is collusive as a matter of law and otherwise, and that additional suits of such nature may be filed if the parties are able to not only bring the present suit in such manner but be greatly over-compensated therefor. Unless this Court acts, future private and collusive suits will prevent dairy farmers from exercising their constitutional rights to obtain due process through a truly bona fide suit. Petitioners also respectfully maintain that the Court of Appeals obviously considered this case almost exclusively from the standpoint of the merits, but may have given more attention to petitioners' appeals if it intended to uphold the District Court's decision. However, petitioners are fearful that in the long run, the upholding of the District Court's decision and authorizing payment of attorneys' fees to counsel under such circumstances will prove to be a greater threat to their most basic constitutional rights, a fact which is shown to some degree by the present joint actions of the parties' counsel herein.

Although the Second Circuit has reversed the District Court's decision on the merits on the basis of this Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen, petitioners believe that the current posture of this case in respect to the joint proposal of the attorneys for the named plaintiffs and defendant-interveners concerning extension of the illegal nearby differential and disbursement of about 50% of the escrow fund or $500,000 to the said attorneys for losing performances herein illustrate why this Court should grant this petition for a writ of certiorari.

Petitioners do not believe that any decision of this Court authorizes either of the two main objectives of the said joint proposal, and that the decision of this Court in Zuber v. Allen, cited by the parties' counsel as a basis for such joint proposal, specifically applies to prevent either objective. In addition to holding the nearby differential illegal, this Court discussed cases dealing with the proper function of both the Court and the administrator, and the following statement appears pertinent in regard to the actions which have repeatedly delayed final disposition of the Gunston case: [15]

> "Lest losing parties be encouraged to prolong litigation by frivolous appeals in order to reap a windfall, we think respondents deserve the fruits of their victory as of the final judgment at trial."

Petitioners respectfully submit that this Court's prior decisions disclose that it has full power to order the disbursement of the involved escrow fund to non-nearby producers even if the Court should rule that the Gunston suit was collusive as a matter of law and an improper class action. Furthermore, the Herrington case which is still pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia requests that the Secretary be enjoined from disbursing any present escrow fund collected in any other

[15] In regard to the present claims of "disorderly marketing" as a result of termination of the nearby differential and the need of nearby producers for a "breathing spell", we note that the District Court adopted the nearby producers' argument that the nearby differential was not a market barrier, and that the Federal Milk Order Study Committee Report of December 1952, pp. 76-77 stated that milk could not enter the Connecticut market because of Connecticut sanitary regulations, a fact which shows control over the influx of milk and which was admitted by the testimony of the CMPA economist set forth with the FMOSC Report at pp. 19e-33e of the brief of Russell Allen, et al., in opposition to the brief of the State of Connecticut in opposition to the petition of Allen, et al., for certiorari in No. 861, October Term, 1968, Zuber v. Allen.

action, and all of the parties have admitted on the record the illegality of the Connecticut nearby differential. This Court could also direct the disbursement of such escrowed monies under the jurisdiction of the Bennington court with specific instructions concerning eligibility for counsel fees and expenses therefrom. Inland Steel v. U.S., et al., 306 U.S. 153; S.E.C. v. Chenery Corp., 332 U.S. 203; U.S. v. Morgan, 307 U.S. 183.

CONCLUSION

The petition for certiorari should be granted and an order issued staying disbursement of the escrow fund except to non-nearby producers by the District Court and directing the immediate termination of the nearby differential and the escrowing thereunder.

APPENDIX A

PORTIONS OF HEARINGS IN CRANSTON v. FREEMAN

May 15, May 27 and June 10, 1958

• • • • •

Although the government and the aforesaid counsel for the nearby producers strongly questioned the maintenance of the Allen case as a class action and insisted that 6,000 non-nearby producers located in three of four states were indispensible parties, it is noted that only the government opposed the maintenance of the Cranston suit as a class action and government counsel subsequently withdrew such objections only in the Cranston case:

> "THE COURT: Does the Government wish to be heard?
>
> MR. KRAUSE: Your Honor, we do not intend to present any evidence on this subject, and we have no objection to the maintenance of the class action, either on behalf of the plaintiffs or on behalf of the defendant-intervenors. • • • •"
>
> THE COURT: Well, as far as the Order, and I frankly do think we are at the point where the Court should comply with the rule and enter an Order –
> MR. KRAUSE: As I say, we have no objection to that." (R. 1164; T. 299-301).

In respect to notification of other dairy farmers concerning the Cranston suit, the plaintiff Cranston testified as follows on May 27, 1968, concerning the institution of that suit on February 9, 1967:

> "Q. What other producers did you actually talk to before you instituted this case, concerning the institution of this case? A. I don't recall that I talked with any others than I have mentioned regarding the institution of the case. • • • (other two plaintiffs)
>
> Q. Now, after the institution of this suit, what producers did you then contact and advise of the pendency of this suit? A. Mr. Ottman, Mr. Phillips and Mr. Mesick.
>
>
> Q. And Mr. Ottman, Mr. Phillips and Mr. Mesick are in the 23-cents zone, which is different from the zone that the initial three plaintiffs were in; are they not? A. This is correct.
> Q. And they were subsequently added as plaintiffs to the case by an amended complaint? A. Yes, sir."

The individual plaintiff Mesick testified as follows on May 27, 1968, in the Cranston collusion proceeding:

> "Q. Can you tell me whether you had knowledge of your being a plaintiff in this particular action? A. Not until the other day.
> Q. Now, your testimony is that you did not know, until the other day, that you were a plaintiff in this particular action? A. That is correct.

Q. And can you identify Mr. John P. Weatherwax for me, please? (plaintiffs' attorney) A. I could not, other than since I came into this courtroom I realized where Mr. Weatherwax is sitting.

Q. And you name is, however, listed as an individual plaintiff in this action, representing a class of other dairy farmers? is that correct? A. Well, apparently.

• • • • •

Q. In other words, you discussed this with Mr. Ottman, who is also listed as a plaintiff in this case? A. Yes.

Q. And he was also unaware of this fact? A. This is correct.

Q. In other words, you never authorized your name to be affixed to any of these pleadings as a plaintiff; is that correct? A. No; I certainly did not.

• • • • •

Q. Had you ever met Mr. Weatherwax or did you know him before this day? A. To the best of my knowledge, no."

The plaintiffs' attorney in Cranston testified as follows concerning the foregoing testimony of Mr. Mesick:

"Q. Now, have you ever spoken to either Mr. Mesick or Mr. Ottman concerning this action? A. Personally?

Q. Yes. A. No."

The transcript of the trial itself discloses the following at pages 118-119 concerning the non-appearance of Ottman and Mesick at the trial:

> "MR. WEATHERWAX: The Court please, I had anticipated named plaintiffs Roy Ottman and George Mesick, Jr., would be here to testify today, but both have illnesses in their homes and were unable to be here. So I have just verified that fact, so I will not be able to produce their testimony today, and I will not produce it at any time, for that matter, as I feel perhaps that the testimony of the other named plaintiffs will probably be sufficient for the purposes for which their testimony was offered.
>
> THE COURT: That is Ottman and Mesick. Those are the two plaintiffs you mentioned?
> MR. WEATHERWAX: Yes. • • • ".

The plaintiff Phillips in the Cranston case maintained that he had contacted plaintiffs Ottman and Mesick but he appeared to contradict himself during the hearings on collusion and inadequacy of representation:

> "Q. Now, when was the first occasion that you met with the other plaintiffs concerning this case? A. As a group, I think prior to the fall trial. I had talked to Mr. Cranston on the phone about it, but I hadn't attended any meetings."
>
> "Q. Now, did you – when was it that you first discussed the litigation with Mr. Mesick? A. Oh, probably a year ago. I couldn't begin to say the date, but I would say about a year ago.

Q. Well, now, how far before the trial in October of 1967 had you discussed it with Mr. Mesick? A. Well, long enough to get his approval and inform Mr. Cranston that they were willing to have their names used.

Q. Well, now, I didn't ask you about any other individual. I was asking about Mr. Mesick. Have you ever had any meeting with Mr. Mesick and Mr. Ottman, together, and yourself? A. No, I have not.

Q. And do you have any financial contract or understanding of any nature with Mr. Weatherwax, your attorney, concerning the expenses and the fees of this proceeding? A. No, I do not.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Mesick or Mr. Ottman on this subject? A. I don't know. We might have, generally, talked about it, because there is always costs involved in such things, but nothing definite.

Q. Now, what do you mean 'costs involved in such things? Wouldn't this be a logical subject that would be immediately brought up? A. Well, yes. As I say, it was a subject that was brought up, but I don't know that we arrived at any conclusion.

Q. Are you saying that Mr. Mesick or Mr. Ottman would enter into a situation of this nature without knowing anything about the financial arrangements? A. Well, as I got involved in it, we were asked to participate as the intermediate group, and I think we all jointly concluded that Mr. Cranston and Mr. Weatherwax were handling the case and we would lend our assistance because of our location.

Q. Now, when you say 'we', did somebody ask you and Mr. Ottman and Mr. Mesick in a group? A. Well, I was asked individually, and I think the others were, also.

Q. But you don't know that for a fact, do you? A. Well, I never asked them."

The record in the Cranston case discloses the following testimony by the plaintiff Cranston on the question of his fitness to represent the class plaintiffs:

"Q. Now, you feel very strongly, Mr. Cranston, about the nearby differential of the Connecticut Milk Order? A. What do you mean 'feel very strongly'?

Q. Against it. A. Against it, yes.

Q. And yet, you didn't notify anybody about the litigation, other than Mr. Ottman, Mr. Phillips, and Mr. Mesick? A. No.

Q. And you feel that you can adequately and fairly represent the plaintiffs' class in this suit under the circumstances? A. Well, I believe that was a ruling in this Court.

MR. WEATHERWAX: Now, Harold, don't go into that. He just asked you a simple question. Now, answer the question as best you can.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. WEATHERWAX: Okay. That takes care of that.

BY MR. RYAN:

Q. Now, isn't it a fact, Mr. Cranston, that you are not even a milk producer at this time? A. This is true." (T. 270-71).

The witness Seremet, CMPA manager for 26 years, testified as follows concerning the plaintiff Cranston during the collusion hearings:

"Q. Do you know whether or not he was regarded, in his locality, as a spokesman against the nearby differentials? A. He had initiated some action, previously, with regard to the nearby differentials.

Q. Can you tell us approximately when Mr. Cranston had initiated previous action? A. There was a petition signed by he and others with regard to nearby differential expansion in the Federal Order hearings, but I can't remember the dates."

Witness Alexander Marbot, a non-nearby producer, testified as follows during the Cranston collusion hearings:

"Q. Now, have you ever had any conversation with any individual concerning the nearby differential of the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order? A. Yes, with Ted Blakely and a man by the name of Frank Bragg. That was a long while.

Q. Now, will you identify those individuals? A. Well, Frank Bragg is the field man, and I don't know what Blakely is. I believe he is a trouble shooter of some sort, but I just don't know.

Q. With whom? A. Beg pardon?

Q. With what organization? A. With C.M.P.A.

Q. All right. Now, when did this conversation occur? A. I believe it was January the 21st, the first time they approached me to sue for the differential, and to sue in Connecticut, that they would break the differentials but hold the Federal order in Connecticut, and they approached me three times on this.

Q. Now, when you say 'break', they told you that they would 'break the differentials', what do you mean by that? A. I asked them what they meant by that, and they said I would get 46 cents a hundred more for my milk.

Q. If you brought this case? A. To court, and, after the third time, I told them I wanted to see my lawyer and talk it over with him before I would say yes or no. And then they thought they might be back that day or the next day, and I haven't seen them since. I have seen Bragg, as field man, and Blakely I haven't seen since, and, later, I heard Cranston and the other boys were opening a suit.

Q. Now, I want you to state this again if you would. Now, you are stating that these CMPA personnel or officials asked you to bring this case in the State of Connecticut and that it would result in the breaking of the differentials, that you would receive 46 cents more for your milk; is that correct? A. That's right."

Under cross-examination by Mr. Weatherwax, the witness testified (T. 157) that Mr. Blakely had stated:

"A. • • • 'Yes, Marbot, it won't cost you one penny. We will pay the attorney that we appoint to you. If he loses, we pay him. If he wins, it will come out of the escrow account. It won't cost you one penny,' is what they told me, but, when I wanted to see my lawyer, that was the end of it."

The witness Seremet also testified as follows concerning the institution of the Cranston suit on February 9, 1967:

"Q. Now, did you, at any time, talk to Harold Cranston, either on the telephone or in person, concerning the institution of this action? A. Yes.

Q. And could you tell me when that was? A. Sometime the latter part of January.

Q. Well, would you be a little more specific as to the date? A. If I recollect, it would be around the 27th of January.

Q. And was that in person or by telephone? A. By telephone, sir.

• • • • •

Q. In January of 1967, when you telephoned Mr. Cranston, what was the subject of your conversation at that time? A. As I recall it, it would concern itself with the nearby differential that was a result of the Blair decision.

• • • • •

Q. And how would the Blair case enter into your contacting these particular producers? A. As I recall, the Blair case ruled out the nearby differentials in the New York Order. There was an action taken in the Boston, the Massachusetts–Rhode Island Order, on the nearby differentials, and it occurred to us that action in the Connecticut Order might be well worth taking • • • ."

"Q. Now, did you ask Mr. Cranston if he would institute a suit at that time? A. Asked him if he would be interested in instituting a suit, he and others." (T. 173; see also 167-168).

• • • • •

Q. Now, you recommended an attorney, at that time, for Mr. Cranston to consult? A. Yes. We had – the association or I had a name of an attorney in Albany by the name of Brearton, that was recommended as a potential attorney to handle the case.

Q. Now, who recommended Mr. Brearton? A. Mr. Conard.

Q. Mr. Conard; and is Mr. Conard counsel for your association? A. Yes."

• • • • •

"Q. Now, when did Mr. Conard recommend to you Mr. Brearton, prior to your making the telephone call to Mr. Cranston? A. It would be prior to the call; how soon prior to that, I really can't recall, at this point.

Q. Well, what were – where was that – where did that conversation take place?
A. (No Response)

* * * * *

Q. And did Mr. Cranston accept the offer of Mr. Brearton's services? A. Of what?

Q. Did Mr. Cranston accept your offer of Mr. Brearton's services, as the prospective Plaintiff's attorney? A. I don't recall that he accepted. He suggested another attorney.

Q. And what was your response when he suggested another attorney? A. That we would like to check on his reputation and see what kind of an attorney he was, if he was capable.

Q. And did you subsequently do that?
A. Yes.

Q. And how soon after your telephone call with Mr. Cranston was that done? A. I don't recall, at this point.

Q. Did Mr. Cranston identify the attorney that he desired to have represent him? A. Yes.

Q. And who was that? A. Weatherwax."

* * * * *

"Q. Now, has Mr. Brearton ever handled any milk case or milk litigation, to your knowledge? A. No, I do not know.

Q. But you testified you were desirous of furnishing a competent attorney? A. Yes, sir."

• • • • •

"Q. Well, you have indicated that you told Mr. Cranston that you wanted to check out Mr. Weatherwax to see whether he was competent and so forth. Now, how long after that was Mr. Cranston told that it was okay to proceed with a suit and to contact Mr. Weatherwax? In other words, was this in a matter of a few days or weeks? A. It would have been in a matter of a few days."

• • • • •

"Q. Mr. Seremet, other than yourself and Mr. Conard, I believe you testified Mr. Longo – were there any other individuals that were aware of your telephone call to Mr. Cranston, in the association? A. I don't recall.

Q. You don't recall? A. No.

Q. In other words, was there any special meeting called for this purpose, or was this an individual thing on the part of these persons?"

• • • • •

"A. It has been a board policy to defend the nearby differentials and the Connecticut price, and this is an action in line with that policy.

Q. That wasn't my question, Mr. Seremet. Was there any meeting that preceded your telephone call to Mr. Cranston? A. I know of no meeting, other the district meetings that we had been holding at that time of the year in all of our districts.

Q. Those district meetings are concerned with many matters, are they not? A. Correct.

Q. Now, what I am asking is, was there any specific meeting that preceded your telephone call to Mr. Cranston? A. I don't recall any specific meeting, sir.

Q. Are you stating this was individual action, by yourself?

MR. GOLDBLOOM: Objection, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Sustained.

BY MR. RYAN:

Q. Do you know of any formal meeting that was called with respect to the institution of this action by Mr. Cranston?

MR. GOLDBLOOM: I object.

THE COURT: Sustained. You have asked that about three different ways."

* * * * *

"Q. Now, did you indicate anything concerning payment of expenses of the lawsuit? A. Yes, we discussed the problem.

Q. In what specific manner? A. In this area, that the nearby producers were going to be supplied with counsel to defend their position, or we would assume the expenses of that, and we would be willing – we, the association, would be willing to help in supplying the attorneys for the distant producers.

Q. And you would pay the fees of those two attorneys? A. Well, I don't know if that was mentioned as fees. Certainly, if distant producers won the case, that the escrow monies would probably take care of the expenses of the attorneys.

Q. Now, how do you know that to be a fact? A. I don't.

Q. In other words, if the attorney for the distant producers lost the case, he would be compensated by the association? A. Reasonable expenses would probably be compensated.

Q. And that includes an attorney's fee? A. I would think so, part of it." (T. 174-75).

* * * * *

"Q. Well, the Allen decision was on June 15 of 1967. Now, did the Association attempt to intervene in that case? A. In the Allen case?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, we did, sir.

Q. And who was your attorney at that time? A. Mr. Reuben Hall and Mr. Conard.

Q. And did you have local counsel in Washington at that time? A. Probably through Mr. Hollman.

Q. Of Klasgbrunn & Hanes; Mr. Lawrence, Hollman? A. I really don't know, at this point. It was Mr. Hall that the contact was made with, and through Mr. Conard.

Q. You did not, at that time, seek to obtain an attorney in the District of Columbia, yourself; is that correct? A. No.

Q. Now, prior to the Blair decision, had any producers ever indicated an interest in bringing any legal action to challenge the nearby differential of the Connecticut Order? A. I don't know about legal action. There certainly were producers who had asked to have Federal order changes made, to change the —

Q. Were there not many objections by distant producers to the differential? A. There were some objections; yes, sir.

Q. At that time, did you offer to provide an attorney or to attempt to institute any suit in behalf of those producers, prior to the Blair or Allen decisions? A. This was in connection with Federal orders. I don't know of any other legal action that was taken.

Q. No, I realize that, but, prior to the Blair decision and the Allen decision, did you ever attempt to accommodate your distant members with respect to institution of any legal action, to challenge the nearby differential of the Connecticut Order? A. No."

* * * * *

"Q. You stated that your distant members did evidence opposition to the differential prior to the Blair case. A. There were some distant producers that wanted to be included in the nearby zones, yes.

Q. And you – did you, at that time, take any action to provide them with an attorney or expenses or anything to contest the particular differential at that time? A. I don't recall that we had."

* * * * *

"Q. And didn't you feel that these producers that you desired were competent to take their own legal steps? A. I didn't question whether they would desire it.

Q. But you did not wait to see whether they would do so, is that correct, after the Blair decision? A. There was a period of time where we waited, yes."

The witness Seremet testified as follows under examination by CMPA counsel:

"Q. Now, where – Mr. Seremet, whether Mr. Cranston chose Mr. Weatherwax for his lawyer or any other member of the bar, did you agree, by words or inference, to pay Mr. Weatherwax or any lawyer, any sum of money whatsoever? A. I told Mr. Cranston that we would help in the expenses – a reasonable amount in the expense of the defense of their position."

* * * * *

"Q. All right. Now, I am going to ask my question again. Did you, at any time, by words or inference, say or suggest that you would pay any money to Mr. Weatherwax or any other member of the bar? A. I am not positive.

Q. I am only talking about the conversation with Mr. Cranston. Did you, sir, say or suggest that you would pay any money to Mr. Weatherwax or any member of the bar? A. I don't recall that; no, sir.

Q. So you believe that you did not say it? A. I did not."

The plaintiff Cranston, a CMPA member like the other two original plaintiffs testified as follows at the collusion hearings:

BY MR. RYAN:

"Q. Now, what was the balance of the conversation, Mr. Cranston? A. Well, he asked if I had a lawyer. I said I did – we did.

Q. Now, who is 'we'? A. Mr. Carlson, Mr. French, with whom I had discussed this.

Q. And you had discussed it with them when? A. On different occasions.

Q. Well now – A. Over the past several years, none of us have been happy with this.

Q. I realize that, Mr. Cranston, but you have now testified that you told – if my recollection is correct, that you told Mr. Seremet that 'We had a lawyer.' A. Yes.

* * * * *

"Q. When did yourself, Mr. Carlson and Mr. French obtain a lawyer? A. I can't remember the exact date.

Q. Well, was it prior or subsequent to the time of Mr. Seremet's telephone call, concerning which you are now testifying? A. As I stated before I have talked with John (Weatherwax) because he is a neighbor

Q. Yes. A. – Mr. Weatherwax, on many occasions, about the discrepancies that exist in the payments. We were agreed that it was a ridiculous situation.

MR. RYAN: Your Honor, the witness is not being responsive to the question at all.

THE COURT: I believe he is. Mr. Ryan's remark, construed as a motion to strike, is denied.

BY MR. RYAN:

Q. When, Mr. Cranston, did you, Mr. Carlson and Mr. French obtain the services of a lawyer; was it prior or subsequent to this telephone call? A. It was subsequent."

* * * * *

"Q. Now, when did you first go to Mr. Weatherwax for the purpose of instituting this litigation? A. I can't remember the date.

Q. Now, how much time elapsed from the time that you, Mr. Carlson and Mr. French consulted Mr. Weatherwax and the time that this suit was filed, approximately? A. I can't remember that exactly. I am sorry, but I didn't make a record of any of this stuff.

Q. Well, could you tell me – A. I didn't think it was important at the time.

Q. Well, could you tell me whether it was a matter of days, weeks, months, or do you have any approximate estimate? A. A week, more or less, maybe.

Q. Pardon me? A. A week, more or less, maybe. I don't know exactly.

Q. And did you all go to Mr. Weatherwax's office to consult him, or what were the circumstances? A. If you mean Mr. Carlson, Mr. French and myself, yes we did.

Q. And how did you go; together by automobile, one automobile, or separately, or what? A. I believe there were two carloads of us – two cars of us.

Q. And was anybody with you, at that time, other than yourself, Mr. Carlson and Mr. French? A. Yes.

Q. Could you state who they were, please? A. Mr. Longo.

Q. And who is Mr. Longo? A. He is the President of the CMPA.

Q. And was there anybody else with you? A. I believe Frank Bragg.

Q. And who is Mr. Frank Bragg? A. He is a fieldman with the CMPA.

Q. And was there anybody else with you? A. I think Ted Blakely was there.

Q. And who is Mr. Blakely? A. Well, I don't know what his exact position is. He works for the CMPA.

Q. And was there anybody else there? A. No, not in Mr. Weatherwax's office.

Q. No, that went with you to Mr. Weatherwax's office. Did not, in fact, Mr. Conard and another attorney go with you? A. Mr. Conard never went to Mr. Weatherwax's office with us.

Q. Did he come to your home? A. He came to my home, yes.

Q. In the company of the other individuals? A. That is correct.

Q. And did he go into Troy with you? A. He rode down to Troy with us, yes."

* * * * *

"Q. And during your conversation with Mr. Seremet, your telephonic conversation that you testified to, was anything else discussed, at that time, concerning payment of fees or the expenses – the expenses or fees of the case? A. I believe Mr. Seremet explained that.

* * * * *

"Q. Well, now, I am asking the question, what are the financial arrangements in the event that the plaintiffs do not prevail in this litigation? A. There is no written agreement that I know of.

Q. Well – excuse me. A. We expect to win the case, but, in the event we don't, I suppose we will be submitted a bill by Mr. Weatherwax, which we will promptly resubmit to the CMPA and hope that they come through on their word. That is all I know."

* * * * *

The plaintiff Cranston testified as follows under examination by his own attorney:

BY MR. WEATHERWAX:

"Q. And as a – and then, the question came up that, in the event that the suit went against the plaintiffs – finally went against the plaintiffs that only in that event would the CMPA take care of the minority; is that not it?

MR. CRANSTON: This is substantially correct."

The record reflects the following testimony by the plaintiff French when examined by his own attorney:

BY MR. WEATHERWAX:

"Q. Do you recall meeting at Mr. Cranston's home on February 3rd, 1967, for the purpose of discussing the bringing of this action?
A. The first part of February. I don't know whether it was the 3rd or not.

Q. Do you remember, at that time, some gentlemen from Connecticut came to Mr. Cranston's home? A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember, later on, you people coming to my office? A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you see Mr. Conard, the lawyer, the gentleman sitting in the third from the end – this end. Did he call, with some other CMPA members, at Mr. Cranston's home on that day? A. Yes."

* * * * *

On cross-examination plaintiff French testified as follows in respect to the meeting of February 3, 1967 (351-52):

"Q. Mr. French, on February 3, 1967, you attended a meeting at Mr. Cranston's home?
A. We met at Mr. Cranston's home, yes.

Q. Did you actually have a meeting on that date at his home? A. Well, we met there and talked for awhile, while we were waiting to go down to Mr. Weatherwax's office.

Q. But, as a meeting as such, was that actually a meeting, or was it a gathering point? A. It was – I would say it was a gathering point.

Q. Pardon me, sir? A. I would say it was a gathering point.

Q. Yes. Now, prior to that time, had you ever attended any meeting at Mr. Cranston's home concerning the nearby differentials or the institution of this action? A. No; I didn't at his home.

Q. Had you attended any meeting or conference at Mr. Weatherwax's office prior to the date of February 3, 1967? A. No.

Q. Are you personally obligated in any way, concerning any of the financial aspects of this case, as far as expenses or attorney fees are concerned, sir? A. No."

* * * * *

"Q. Now, did you attend the trial, sir? A. Just the first day.

Q. And have you ever read any of the pleadings that were filed? A. No, I didn't." (T. 354).

The plaintiff Phillips testified as follows during the Cranston collusion hearings:

"Q. And do you have any financial contract or understanding of any nature with Mr. Weatherwax, your attorney, concerning the expenses and fees of this proceeding? A. No, I do not."

• • • • •

"Q. Now, have you ever been in the office of Mr. Weatherwax, your attorney, other than on February 3rd, 1967? A. I think I mentioned, awhile ago, that I wasn't in there on February 3rd.

Q. Yes, you did. I am very sorry, sir. Have you ever been in Mr. Weatherwax's office? A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you ever received any of the pleadings that have been filed in this action? A. I read the summary.

Q. What are you referring to when you say 'summary', sir? A. Of the hearing.

Q. Do you mean after the trial? A. Yes.

Q. Had you ever read anything prior to the trial? A. No."

• • • • •

"Q. And you attended the trial, you say, for one day. Was that your testimony, sir? A. I did attend the trial for one day.

Q. Yes, and how many days did the trial last? A. Well, I heard them mention it here. I was here one day, and then I had to go to Syracuse. When I got back, it was over.

Q. And how long were you in Syracuse?
A. Two days.

Q. And you attended the trial but one day, but you wanted Mr. Mesick and Mr. Ottman to attend the trial; is that correct?
A. Yes."

The plaintiff Carlson testified that he met with the others at Cranston's home on February 3, 1967, before proceeding to Mr. Weatherwax's office, and he also testified as follows when examined by applicant's attorney:

"Q. Sir, do you have any agreement with your attorney, Mr. Weatherwax, concerning payment of his fee or the expnses –
A. No, sir.

Q. – for this action? A. No, sir."

The following is a portion of the testimony of Louis Longo, CMPA President and owner of a 360-acre "nearby" farm in Connecticut:

"Q. Yes. Now, did you, at that time, meet with any distant producers or with any attorney that represented distant producers in that litigation? A. As far as the Allen litigation and the Blair?

Q. Yes. A. I don't recall any meetings held specifically for that purpose, no.

Q. But did you take any steps to assist your distant or non-nearby members in respect to presenting a position in that litigation, either Blair or Allen? A. Did we take any steps to assist?

Q. Yes, your non-nearby or distant producers in putting forth a position in that litigation? A. First – well, first we had no – I don't follow this question of assisting them.

Q. You have already testified that the Association filed a brief amicus curiae in the Blair case – A. That is right.

Q. – that they attempted to intervene in the Allen case, in both instances, in behalf of nearby producers and continuation of the differentials. A. May I say it has been entirely our feeling in defending the nearby differential that we were assisting our distant producers.

Q. That is not my question. Did you, in fact, take no action to assist distant and – A. It was our feeling that we were assisting the distant producers.

Q. You still haven't responded to my question. * * * Did you, in fact, authorize any attorney to take any steps, in either Blair or Allen, to represent the position that these current plaintiffs espouse in this action – in the Blair and Allen litigation. A. Here again, no, not directly.

Q. And you have testified that there were objections, previously, to this nearby differential by producers – as you call them, up-country producers. Did you take any steps, at that time, to assist those producers? A. Yes. We based the objections on the fact that the producers were not acquainted with what constituted provisions or orderly marketing as far as the ordinary –

Q. I am not interested in your opinion of orderly marketing. A. It isn't my opinion.

Q. Did you take any steps that would constitute a challenge to this differential prior to the filing of this action? A. No."

* * * * *

"Q. Now, do you feel that you have to pursue the question of the ability of any of your members to bring a legal action and to consult an attorney? A. Well, it isn't a matter of the individual member, so much as the entire membership, itself. I think that the Association would pursue any matter in the same – with the same effect and in the same manner."

* * * * *

"Q. Did you ever come to my office, Mr. Longo? A. No, I have never been to your office.

Q. Did you ever attempt to contact me in any manner, whatsoever? A. No.

Q. Did any of your attorneys, prior to institution of either the Blair or Allen cases? A. No, none that I know of.

Q. Now, what other dairy farmers, other than the three that we have named, actually took part in any meeting or evidenced any specific requests for any legal action in this area? (Witness previously testified Cranston and others threatened action at meetings) A. Well, I don't know their names specifically. There were a number of dairy farmers."

* * * * *

"Q. And you own a dairy farm in the State of Connecticut, do you not? A. That's right.

Q. And you would be affected by the elimination of the differential; would you not? A. No more than any other producer in our organization, distant or far?

Q. Well, you would be affected; would you not? A. By the fact of disorderly marketing that would be created.

Q. That is not my question. You have been making speeches here. You would be affected financially, adversely, by the elimination? A. Yes. I would be affected in the same proportion as all other individuals."

Witness Kenneth Herrington testified as follows as to plaintiff Carlson during the collusion hearings:

"* * * Then I asked – I went to visit one of them, a Mr. Carlson, because I – this was after the trial had taken place. I visited Mr. Carlson and asked him what he thought of it or he came and asked to get involved, or what happened, and he told me the field man from CMPA, a Mr. Bragg, had asked him to be a plaintiff in the case, and I asked him if he was bearing any of the expenses, and he said, 'No, Mr. Bragg, the field man, said we didn't have to worry about any of the expenses, that CMPA was bearing the expenses of any lawyer fees', and I said, 'Well,' — then, he said, 'Well, what made me mad at the CMPA is that they joined the side of the Government after they came to us and asked us to have the case', and I said — at this time, I said, 'Well, don't you feel something is wrong, they offered to pay the expenses of your lawyer, then they are on the other side', and he said, 'Well, it certainly doesn't look right,' but he said, 'I am not too happy with CMPA for doing this'."

The witness testified as follows under cross-examination by Mr. Weatherwax:

"Q. No, I said dismissed. Why do you believe it should be dismissed? A. Because of the way that it all started; the way that it was solicited; the way that Mr. Cranston had talked to me, told me, anyway, that it was brought up by CMPA, the fees were to pay the lawyers who were being paid by CMPA. He seems to have lost all control himself."

Another non-nearby producer, Paul Schmidt, stated as follows concerning his understanding that the CMPA was representing non-nearby producers who desired to eliminate the nearby differential:

> "Your Honor, I am not acquainted with Court procedures, and I can't hear too good, so, if I step out of line, I need some guidelines. My name is Paul Schmidt. I am a CMPA member. I am not for or against anything. I would like more information. I was under the impression CMPA was representing us outside producers, and the only notice I had to appear was what I read in the CMPA Bulletin. I received no formal notice, but, lately, I heard the CMPA is representing the nearby producers, so, without any disrespect, I would like to know where I stand and if I am represented, to make a long story short." (T. 50)

On this same subject, an affidavit filed in Cranston related the following conversation with plaintiff Cranston prior to the hearings on collusion and inadequacy of representation.

> "MR. RYAN: If that case had been brought down here, there wouldn't have been any problem that I could see for the court here has ruled twice against the differential –
>
> MR. CRANSTON: Well, that's why they didn't want it brought down there. They wanted it tried up here.
> MR. RYAN: Well, that's why I was trying to see to what extent they were involved in bringing it up there because –

MR. CRANSTON: They brought it because they knew someone was going to bring it. They wanted to be able to control it. By bringing it first, why, they could. And they could say where it was going to be tried —".

* * * * *

MR. RYAN: The other side isn't really supposed to be involved, and it casts an unwholesome atmosphere over the litigation, the courts feel, when that's so, you see.

MR. CRANSTON: Well, that's right. That's right. And I felt all along they were playing with fire but they were desperate.

MR. RYAN: Well, that's what I mean. You see, they lost two cases and that's their last shot. And they are desperate, and when you're desperate you take desperate measures.

MR. CRANSTON: That's true, and that's what they did."

Re: Cranston, et al. v. Hardin and Guilian, et al., Nos. 32,793-32, 796

Dear Mr. Fusaro:

I enclose for filing with the Court the original and three copies of a Response on behalf of appellees Albert Guilian, et al. to the "Opposition of Appellants Duncan, et al. to Motions of Cranston, et al., and Guilian, et al., for Supplementation of Decision" which was recently filed with the Court.

In view of the extensive number of filings thus far on the question of an appropriate remedy in this case since the Supreme Court's decision in Zuber v. Allen and the complicated nature of the questions presented, the Defendant Interveners are of the opinion that oral argument before this Court, as has been requested by Plaintiffs, would serve to assist the Court in reaching its decision and they therefore join in Plaintiffs request to this effect.

Very truly yours,

/s/ Frederick U. Conard, Jr.

Per Curiam:

Plaintiffs, dairy farmers residing in Rensselaer County, New York, brought this action on behalf of themselves and all other persons in their class against the Secretary of Agriculture for an injunction against allegedly discriminatory and as such unconstitutional price differentials to milk producers authorized by the Secretary pursuant to a Connecticut Milk Marketing Order (the Order), 7 C.F.R. § 1015, et seq. (1968), based upon the location of such producers' farms. Declaratory relief was also sought. Three dairy farmers interested in supporting the price differentials were allowed to intervene as defendants. Upon the trial the issues to be resolved were: (1) whether the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (the Act), 7 U.S.C. § 601, et seq., authorizes the Secretary to include in the Order certain farm location differentials; (2) whether such differentials are unconstitutionally discriminatory; and (3) whether there is substantial evidence in the administrative record to support the Secretary's inclusions of such differentials in the Order. The trial court in comprehensive findings of fact and conclusions of law and a memorandum of decision after trial held that (1) the Act authorities farm location differentials; (2) such differentials are not constitutionally discriminatory; and (3) the administrative record supports the Secretary's inclusions of such differentials in the Order. Jurisdiction and venue, the propriety of a class action both as to plaintiffs and intervenor-defendants, claims of bias of the Judge, and the questioned adversary nature of the proceedings were all properly resolved by the court.

The farm location price differential issue arises because of a provision in the Order that

"1015.72 Farm location differentials.

(a) In making payments to producers for milk received from a farm located in Connecticut, Rhode Island, in that protion of New York State east of the Hudson River and south of the Berkshire Section of the New York State Thrusay, or in that portion of Massachusetts south of the Massachusetts Turnpike, there shall be added 46 cents per hundredweight.

(b) In making payments [then are described certain other geographic areas] * * * there shall be added 23 cents per hundredweight.

Plaintiffs attack these payments to so-called nearby milk producers as unconstitutionally discriminatory. Decision upon appeal from the trial court's holding of constitutionality and its dismissal of the complaint has been held in abeyance pending the outcome of two cases before the Supreme Court on writs of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit entitled Frederick T. Zuber et al. v. Russell Allen et al., and Clifford M. Hardin, Secretary of Agriculture v. Russell Allen et al.

There, as here, the issue of the constitutionality of the nearby farm price differential was presented to the Court.

In Zuber the District Court had issued a permanent injunction against further payments of the nearby farms price differential. The Court of Appeals had affirmed 402 F.2d 660 (D.C. Cir. 1968). The Supreme Court had granted certiorari, 394 U.S. 958, and on December 9, 1969 affirmed, 396 U.S. 168.

In view of the Zuber decision, the judgment below is reversed and the case remanded to the District Court for such proceedings, including the proper disposition of funds held in escrow during the proceedings and costs and related matters, and the entry of judgment thereon as may be appropriate in the light of Zuber.

QUESTION PRESENTED

This action was brought by six dairy farmers residing in Rensselaer County, New York, suing for themselves individually and on behalf of all other persons in their class similarly situated and affected.[1] They seek declaratory and injunctive relief against the Secretary of Agriculture. Three other dairy farmers residing in Litchfield County, Connecticut, and Berkshire County, Massachusetts, for themselves individually and on behalf of all other persons in their class similarly situated and affected, were permitted to intervene as defendants. The essential questions presented are: (1) whether the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, 7 U.S.C. § 601, et seq., authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to include in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order, 7 C.F.R. § 1015, et seq. (1968), certain farm location differentials, 7 C.F.R. § 1015.72 (1968), which have been in effect since 1959; (2) whether the farm location differentials are unconstitutionally discriminatory; and (3) whether there is substantive evidence in the administrative record to support the Secretary's inclusion of these differentials in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order.

After an eight day trial, the Court holds that the Act does authorize the farm location differentials, that such differentials are not unconstitutionally discriminatory, and that there is substantial evidence in the administrative record to justify inclusion of these differentials in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order. Accordingly, a permanent injunction enjoining the Secretary of Agriculture from administering the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order in such a way as to give effect to the farm location differentials is denied.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

Jurisdiction is founded upon 28 U.S.C. § 1331(a), 28 U.S.C. § 1337, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2, 5 U.S.C. § 701-6 and 7 U.S.C. § 601, et seq.

Venue is properly laid in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391 (e).

PROPRIETY OF CLASS ACTION AND CLASS ACTION DEFENSE; ADVERSARY NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS

Pursuant to Rule 23(c)(1), Fed. R. Civ. P., the Court on October 20, 1967, after hearing evidence, entered two orders: one permitting the named plaintiffs to maintain the instant action as a class action and the other permitting the named defendant-interveners to maintain a class action defense.

With respect to the named plaintiffs, the Court determined, pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P., that they may properly represent the interests of those producers producing and selling milk produced on their respective farms to handlers operating under the order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut marketing area, 7 C.F.R. § 1015, et seq. (1968), where the farms of such producers are located outside the area described in 7 C.F.R. § 1015.72(a) (1968) (in short, those who do not qualify for the 46¢ differential).

With respect to the three named defendant-interveners, the Court likewise determined, pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P., that they may properly represent the interests of those producers producing and selling milk produced on their respective farms to handlers operating under the order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut marketing area, 7 C.F.R. § 1015.72 (a) (1968) (in short, those who do qualify for the 46¢ differential).

In view of the recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for this Circuit in Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 391 F.2d 555 (2 Cir. 1968), the Court on April 22, 1968 directed that all members of plaintiffs' and defendant-interveners' classes be given formal notice of the pendency of the action and an opportunity to be heard with respect to the continued maintenance of the action as a class action. The notices were sent by April 24, 1968 and made returnable on May 15, 1968.

Prior to the Court's order of April 22, 1968, Kenneth Hewitt and Leonard Duncan, members of plaintiffs' class, filed two papers entitled "Motion For Leave To Intervene Under Rule 24 or to Otherwise Enter Action Under Rule 23 for Purpose of Taking Depositions, to Move Dismissal of Suit and for Other Related Relief," and "Answer of Intervenors and Motion to Dismiss Action, for Disposition of Escrow Fund and Other Relief." Because these papers made allegations of collusion which if true would not only have merited reversal of the class action orders but dismissal of the action, a hearing was similarly directed on May 15, 1968.

The Court thereafter held exhaustive hearings on May 15, May 27, and June 10, 1968 at which time all questions relating to the propriety of the maintenance of this action as a class action and all questions relating to Hewitt's and Duncan's claim of collusion were explored. Every interested person was given an opportunity to be heard and to present evidence through the testimony of witnesses and by means of exhibits. The complete record of all prior proceedings in this case was available for inspection by all interested persons at the Albany seat of Court from May 9, 1968.[2]

The evidence presented not only does not in any way justify dismissal of the action but it clearly merits reaffirmation of the Court's orders of October 20, 1967 permitting plaintiffs and defendant-intervenors to maintain

[2] The Court's order of April 22, 1968, provided for the immediate availability of the record at the Albany seat of Court. At the time the order was entered, the undersigned was sitting by designation in the Southern District of New York while the record was located at Bridgeport, Connecticut, the undersigned's official station. It was not until May 6, 1968, when the undersigned's assignment in the Southern District of New York was completed, that the undersigned found it possible to return to Bridgeport to prepare the record, comprising numerous cartons, for shipment to Albany. The undersigned, however, is completely satisfied that all who desired to examine the record were aware of its availability after May 9, 1968, and had ample opportunity to study it. No prejudice resulted from the delay.

this action as a class action pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P. Plaintiffs' class of approximately 250 persons and defendant-interveners' class of approximately 3000 are without any doubt "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." No one has, nor can, dispute that there are questions of both law and fact common to the classes and that the claims of plaintiffs and defenses of defendant-interveners are typical of the claims and defenses of their classes. Furthermore, as a practical matter, the adjudication of the differentials' validity with respect to individual members of the classes would be dispositive as to all class members because the differentials cannot be enforced or withdrawn piecemeal.

The only issue which merits discussion is the charge of collusion raised by Hewitt and Duncan. Also involved here is the issue of fairness and adequacy of representation with respect to plaintiffs' maintenance of this action as a class action. Basically, Hewitt and Duncan claim that the Consolidated Milk Producers' Association (CMPA), formerly the Connecticut Milk Producers' Association, solicited plaintiffs to bring this action in the Northern District of New York, and through payment of plaintiffs' counsel fees and other means have acted to control this action for the benefit of defendant-interveners' class who constitute the majority of the Association's members.

There is no question but that CMPA as an organization is interested in the continuation of farm location differentials. The vast majority of its members receive these differentials and feel that it will be to their benefit to continue to receive them. Defendant-interveners are members of CMPA and their counsel also serves as counsel to CMPA. Furthermore, CMPA readily admits that after the farm location differentials in the neighboring New York-New Jersey Milk Marketing Order were held invalid by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in 1966, the Association was troubled by the consequential uncertainty surrounding the validity of the Connecticut differentials. Part of this concern derived from the fact that a minority of its members, including all the named plaintiffs, did not receive the differentials and had vocally expressed their unhappiness with the situation. In fact, as established by the credible evidence, plaintiff Cranston had discussed the institution of a legal action to challenge the differentials with his long-time friend and neighbor, Attorney John P. Weatherwax, both before and after the decision in the District of Columbia.

It was only after Attorney Weatherwax had agreed to undertake such an action challenging the differentials, that Cranston was contacted on January 27, 1967 by a CMPA official who had heard rumors that Cranston and others intended to commence a suit. This contact was the result of a decision on January 25, 1968 by CMPA to aid any members undertaking either to challenge or defend the differentials by reimbursing such members for reasonable expenses and attorney fees. The CMPA official explained the policy and mentioned a name of a potential attorney, but Cranston said that he already had his own. The official told Cranston that he would like to check on his reputation and see what kind of an attorney he was and if he was capable, because the Association was concerned about having good attorneys on both sides of the question. Aside from the offer to reimburse for reasonable expenses and this conversation and a subsequent meeting between CMPA officials, plaintiffs and Attorney Weatherwax, there is nothing to suggest that CMPA in any way acted improperly. But most importantly, there is not an iota of credible evidence that CMPA, defendant-intervenor, or defendant, acted, attempted to act, or even desired to act, to control plaintiffs' conduct in these proceedings. On the contrary, the record clearly demonstrates that plaintiffs for a number of years have been keenly interested in the abolition of the differentials, that they are at this time just as keenly interested, and that their counsel, Attorney Weatherwax, has at all times consistently, expertly and with the highest professional sense of duty to plaintiffs endeavored to represent their aims. Attorney Weatherwax has forthrightly, earnestly, and unceasingly prosecuted this lawsuit to enjoin the application of the differentials. He has conducted his case as any gentleman and lawyer should and would and has never conceded a point nor failed to present a plausible argument.

The Court is fully cognizant that the payment by one side in an action of an opposing counsel's legal fees is a red flag as to collusion. See United States v. Johnson, 319 U.S. 302 (1943). But in the instant situation, the Association is in a unique position — it is a democratic institution composed of members on both sides of the question and it is duty-bound to serve the interests of all its members. Certainly under these circumstances, the Association's offer to reimburse any of its members for expenses does not give rise to collusion per se. Rather the question must be whether the Association has in any way acted to control plaintiffs' conduct of the lawsuit. Cf. San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal.2d 685, 140 P.2d 666 (1943). If the Court thought that there was even the slightest attempt to exert such control, it would not only reverse its class action orders but it would dismiss the entire action. The Court, however, is thoroughly convinced that no such attempt was made, that the proceedings have been of an adversary nature on the highest level, and that plaintiffs have fairly and more than adequately represented the other members of their class. The Court therefore not only refuses to dismiss this action but reaffirms its decision to permit it to proceed as a class action.[3]

* * * * *

CONCLUSION

The Court concludes that this action presents a justiciable controversy over which the Court has jurisdiction. Plaintiffs and defendant-intervenors are properly representative of the classes of dairy farmers previously designated by the Court.

The Court further concludes that the farm location differentials in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order, 7 C.F.R. § 1015.72 (1968), are authorized by Section 8c(5)(B) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1937, 7 U.S.C. § 608c(5)(B), and are otherwise legal and completely valid provisions of that Order. Therefore the [3] Three members of plaintiffs' class have asked to be excluded therefrom and plaintiffs' counsel has asked the Court to grant this request. The action, however, is a class action pursuant to Rule 23(b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P., and, unlike a class action pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3), an otherwise proper member of the class cannot be excluded simply because he expresses such a desire.

The Court does, however, modify its order of October 20, 1967, with respect to the maintenance of this action as a class action by plaintiffs to the extent of eliminating as named plaintiffs Roy E. Ottman and George E. Minick, Jr., who have signified their desire to withdraw as plaintiffs.

Court denies a permanent injunction enjoining the Secretary of Agriculture from continuing the differentials and directs that judgment be entered in favor of defendant and defendant-intervenors.

This Memorandum of Decision together with separately stated Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law constitute the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Rule 52, Fed. R. Civ. P.

Plaintiffs' motions to strike evidence, including renewal of motions made at the trial and motions which they were granted leave to file subsequent to trial have been carefully considered. The Court denies the motions insofar as they are directed at evidence which supports the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law made herein pursuant to Rule 52, Fed. R. Civ. P., in all other respects the motions are dismissed as moot.

Since this is a class action and judgment will therefore bind all members of plaintiffs' class, the Court deems it advisable to direct the Clerk to delay entry of judgment in favor of defendant and defendant-intervenors for a period of fifteen days and to direct that within that period plaintiffs' counsel shall mail to all members of plaintiffs' class notice of this Court's decision together with an explanation of the effect thereof and a statement as to whether plaintiffs intend to prosecute an appeal. If plaintiffs do not intend to prosecute an appeal, notice must be given of the means by which members of the class may seek leave to file such an appeal and the time limit involved.

Furthermore, because this is an action for an injunction, entry of judgment will automatically and immediately terminate the preliminary injunction granted by order of this Court, Foley, C.J., on March 9, 1967, unless the Court directs otherwise. Rule 62(a), Fed. R. Civ. P. Therefore, in order to fully protect the rights of all parties and to maintain the status quo to permit an appeal, the Court orders that the injunction granted on March 9, 1967 shall continue in force until entry of judgment and thereafter for a period of sixty days upon such terms and conditions as contained in the order of March 9, 1967 unless otherwise directed by the Court. If within sixty days a notice of appeal is filed, the injunction shall continue in force during the pendency of the appeal unless dissolved or modified by the appropriate court.

ORDER

ORDERED as follows:

(1) That the Court's orders of October 20, 1967 with respect to maintenance of this action as a class action by plaintiffs and defendant-intervenors are affirmed in all respects except that Roy E. Ottman and George Merrick, Jr. are eliminated as named plaintiffs.

(2) That all motions to strike evidence, insofar as they are directed at evidence which supports the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law herein pursuant to Rule 52, Fed. R. Civ. P., are denied; in all other respects the motions to strike evidence are dismissed as moot.

(3) That upon the expiration of fifteen days the Clerk shall enter final judgment in favor of defendant and defendant-intervenors dismissing plaintiffs' complaint with costs.

(4) That plaintiffs' counsel within fifteen days shall mail to each member of plaintiffs' class a notice of this Court's decision herein together with an explanation thereof and with a statement as to whether plaintiffs will prosecute an appeal. In the event that plaintiffs do not intend to appeal, notice must also be given as to the means by which members of plaintiffs' class may seek leave to file such an appeal and the time limit involved.

(5) That the injunction granted pursuant to an order of this Court dated March 9, 1967 shall continue in effect until entry of judgment and thereafter for a period of sixty days under such terms and conditions as contained in the Court's order of March 9, 1968, unless the Court directs otherwise.

(6) That if a notice of appeal is filed in this action within sixty days after entry of judgment the injunction granted on March 9, 1967 shall continue thereafter during the pendency of the appeal subject to dissolution or modification at any time by the appropriate court.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
Northern District of New York.

[Same Title.]

The Court, after full hearing, makes the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law which, together with the Court's Memorandum of Decision filed herein, constitute the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Rule 52, Fed. R. Civ. P.

Findings of Fact

1. Plaintiffs are four dairy farmers (milk producers) located in New York State. They bring this action individually, and as representatives of the class of approximately 250 milk producers who do not receive "farm location differentials" pursuant to Section 1015.72(a) of the Order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Area, 7 C.F.R. §1015 (1968).

2. Three other dairy farmers located in Connecticut and Massachusetts were permitted to intervene as defendants on behalf of themselves as individuals, and as representatives of the class of approximately 3000 milk producers receiving farm location differentials pursuant to Section 1015.72(a) of the Connecticut Marketing Order.

3. Plaintiff Cranston has for eight years been opposed to the Connecticut Farm Location Differentials. In 1966 Cranston discussed with his long-time friend and neighbor, attorney John P. Weatherwax, the possibility of bringing legal proceedings challenging the differentials. On January 27, 1967, after Cranston, French and Carlson had definitely decided to commence an action, Cranston was informed by the Consolidated Milk Producers' Association, (CMPA), formerly Connecticut Milk Producers' Association, that CMPA would reimburse members for reasonable expenses incurred in maintaining or defending an action involving the validity of farm location differentials. CMPA, a democratic organization, was motivated by the fact that its members included both those who did, and those who did not, receive the differentials and by the fact that great uncertainty surrounded the differentials. Cranston informed CMPA that he had his own attorney, Mr. Weatherwax. The Association official told Cranston that they would like to check the attorney out as to his reputation since the Association was concerned that both sides should be well represented by competent attorneys. CMPA's official position favors the differentials, and a majority of its members receive them; CMPA's counsel represents defendant-interveners. CMPA officials, plaintiffs, and plaintiffs' attorney met once prior to the filing of this action.

4. Neither defendant nor defendant's counsel knew that this suit would be instituted prior to its actual institution, nor did they have any contact with plaintiffs or plaintiffs' counsel prior to the institution of this action.

5. CMPA at no time has influenced, attempted to influence or in any way affected or controlled plaintiffs' conduct of this action. Nor have defendant-interveners or defendant attempted to exercise control over or influence plaintiffs' conduct of this suit.

6. Plaintiffs and defendant interveners have faithfully, earnestly and forthrightly represented the interests of their respective classes. The attorneys for each class have likewise acted in a thoroughly professional and expert manner. The entire record indicates that this action has been conducted as an adversary proceeding on the highest level. In short, plaintiffs and defendant-interveners have more than fairly and adequately represented the members of their respective classes.

7. The complaint, filed on February 9, 1967, alleges the invalidity, on several grounds, of an action of the Secretary of Agriculture in promulgating the aforementioned provision in the Connecticut Order under the authority contained in the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, 7 U.S.C. 601, et seq.

8. The challenged order provision results in producers whose farms are located in two specified geographical areas receiving a differential over and above the uniform price for milk of 46¢ and 23¢ per hundredweight, respectively, for their milk which is priced under the Order depending upon the designated area in which their farms are located. The Order describes the marketing area as follows:

> "§1015.2 Connecticut marketing area.
>
> 'Connecticut marketing area' referred to in this part as the 'marketing area', means all territory within the State of Connecticut, together with all waterfront facilities connected therewith and craft moored thereat, and all territory therein occupied by government (municipal, State or Federal) installations, institutions or other establishments."

The Order sets forth the provisions relating to the farm location differentials, including the areas affected, as follows:

"1015.72 Farm location differentials.

(a) In making payments to producers for milk received from a farm located in Connecticut, Rhode Island, in that portion of New York State east of the Hudson River and south of the Berkshire Section of the New York State Thruway, or in that portion of Massachusetts south of the Massachusetts Turnpike, there shall be added 46 cents per hundredweight.

(b) In making payments to producers for milk received from a farm located outside the area described in paragraph (a) of this section, but within that portion of New York State east of the Hudson River and south of the northern boundaries of North Greenbush, Sand Lake, and Stephentown townships in Rensselaer County, and within that portion of Berkshire County, Massachusetts north of the Massachusetts Turnpike, there shall be added 23 cents per hundredweight."

9. In accordance with the provisions of the Act, the Secretary of Agriculture promulgated the Connecticut Milk Order, including the challenged provision partially effective on March 1, 1959, and fully effective April 1, 1959, following notice, public hearing, findings based on the evidence introduced at the hearing, and a favorable referendum among producers supplying the proposed marketing area.

10. The Final Decision published by the Secretary incident to the promulgation of the Order on February

11, 1959, discloses that the Secretary included the "farm location differential" provisions under his authority to make adjustments to the uniform producer price contained in Section 608c (5)(B)(ii) of the Act as an adjustment for "market differentials customarily applied by handlers."

11. The Secretary of Agriculture, in subsequent findings based on evidence adduced at subsequent public hearings, reaffirmed and rejustified his original findings in February 1959, with respect to the economic necessity for and the validity of the "farm location differential" provisions in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order.

12. Where the circumstances warranted it, the Secretary of Agriculture has included provisions in other marketing orders for preferential payments to producers based solely on the location of their farms nearby the market.

13. Federal price regulation of milk was first authorized by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933. This Act provided for marketing agreements and for the issuance of licenses by the Secretary of Agriculture regulating the pricing of milk to producers by handlers. Pursuant to this authority, the Secretary of Agriculture issued many licenses regulating the handling and pricing of milk throughout the United States in the areas described in the licenses.

14. Among the stated purposes of the amendments to the Agriculture Adjustment Act in 1935, as they affected milk, were those which were designed to reinforce the existing practices of cooperative associations and to carry forward the methods employed under licenses issued pursuant to the 1933 Act. They were also intended to adopt the present practices of business. These amendments, among others, provided for the adjustments to the uniform producer price for "volume, market and production differentials customarily applied by handlers."

15. Prior to 1933, cooperative associations, as a part of their voluntary methods of pricing milk to producers, gave preferential treatment to nearby producers. This practice was also reflected in the licenses issued under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933. The practice of giving preferential price treatment to producers whose farms were located nearby the market was carried over in some orders issued following the 1935 amendments.

16. The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, re-enacted the provisions, as they affected milk marketing orders, of the 1935 amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Section 4 of the 1937 Act expressly validated existing orders, regulations issued pursuant thereto, and the acts of the Secretary in connection with licenses and orders issued under the AAA. The Conference Committee Report incident to the amendatory legislation expressly stated that Section 4 was to remove all doubts about the validity of actions of the Secretary as reflected in existing orders.

17. The draftsmen of the language of Section 608c (5)(B)(ii) considered the terms "volume, market and production differentials customarily applied by handlers" as embracing the existing practices of cooperatives and the existing methods in licenses which gave recognition to many and varied differentials which could be described as associated with the words, "volume", "marketing" and "production" practices.

18. There were in existence in the various marketing areas in 1935 many different differentials which could be described as based upon or associated with "volume", "market", and "production".

19. The language in the Committee Reports dealing with marketing orders which accompanied the AAA of 1935, when read in its entirety discloses that, in order to reinforce the many and varied existing practices of cooperative associations and methods employed in licenses in pricing producer milk, the words of "volume", "market", and "production" as used to describe differentials in Section 608c(5)(B)(ii) were descriptive of types of differentials.

20. Among the existing differentials practiced by cooperatives and methods employed in licenses were those which gave preferential price treatment to producers based upon the location of their farms nearby the market. This type of differential is within the category of "market differentials customarily applied by handlers."

21. There has been no showing by plaintiffs that the differentials established by Section 1015.72(a) and (b) prohibit the movement of their milk into the Connecticut Marketing Area or that such differentials otherwise constitute a "trade barrier" within the meaning of Section 608c(5)(G) of the Act.

22. The administrative record contains evidence sufficiently substantial to justify the Secretary's promulgation of a nearby differential in his Connecticut order.

Conclusions of Law

1. This is an adversary action presenting justiciable issues over which this Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331(a), 1337, 2201-2, 5 U.S.C. § 701-6 and 7 U.S.C. § 601 et seq.

Venue is properly laid in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e).

2. This is a proper class action pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P., with respect to plaintiffs' and defendant-interveners' classes as set forth in this Court's orders of October 20, 1967.

3. The farm location differentials contained in Sections 1015.72(a) and (b) of the Order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut Marketing Area, 7 C.F.R. § 1015 (1968), are market differentials customarily paid by handlers subject to the Order and as such are authorized pursuant to Section 608c (5)(B) of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, 7 U.S.C. § 601, et seq.

4. The farm location differentials are not "trade barriers" and do not violate Section 608c (5)(G) of the Act.

5. The farm location differentials are not unconstitutionally discriminatory.

6. The Secretary's findings with respect to the inclusion of the farm location differentials in the Connecticut Order is supported by substantial evidence in the administrative record.

Brief of Respondents, Cranston, et al., in Opposition to Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Jurisdiction.

It is respectfully submitted on the question of jurisdiction that petitioners' Proposed Questions 3 and 4 are not matters which are subject to review by this Court inasmuch as they are matters which are pending in the District Court for the Northern District of New York after remand of the case to that Court by the Court of Appeals, Second Circuit for further proceedings and the entry of appropriate judgment. Further comment is included herein under "Questions Presented," together with comment concerning Proposed Questions 1 and 2 with respect to their reviewability on the basis presented in the petition herein.

Questions Presented.

It is respectfully submitted that on the basis of the petition herein, both with respect to form and substance, that no legitimate questions are presented for consideration by this Court. With respect to the four Proposed Questions in the petition herein (pp. 35-37), it is respectfully submitted that the same do not come within the scope and requirement of Rule 19 of this Court, nor is any proper basis set forth in the petition upon which such Proposed Questions can be predicated.

The Proposed Questions are not expressed in the simple terms of the legal principal purported to be under consideration, nor are they expressed in the simple terms and circumstances of the case, but on the contrary, contain many false statements of the facts of the case and many distortions of facts, including many assumptions of facts not supported by credible legal evidence in the record of the case.

With respect to Proposed Question 1, "whether this suit could be maintained as a class action or otherwise * * *," if this question has any validity at all, it is respectfully suggested that it should be based not on the recitations which follow the question on page 35, but should be based on the record before the Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, when it passed upon the question if petitioners seek a review of such decision. In such event, the question should be:

1. Whether the decision of the court below was correct in determining that the action of Cranston, et al., vs. Hardin and Gailian, et al., was a proper class action pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B) Fed. R. Civ. Pro., with respect to plaintiffs and defendant-intervenors' classes set forth by its orders dated October 20, 1967, and in reaffirming the same in its memorandum of decision dated August 2, 1968, and which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals in its decision of July 16, 1970.

With respect to Proposed Question 2, "whether the petitioners were denied adequacy of representation and due process of law * * *," this was an inherent subject of consideration by the lower Courts in their determination of the questions of adequacy of representation, the action being a true adversary action and the applications of the petitioners for further relief in the premises upon the Court's denial of the same. If petitioners seek a review of such determination, then in such event the question should be:

2. Whether the Court was correct in determining that the action of Cranston v. Hardin, et al., was a true adversary action presenting justifiable issues over which the court below had jurisdiction to determine, was properly instituted and prosecuted on the part of the plaintiffs Cranston, et al., and defended on the part of the defendant-intervenors Guilian, et al., free from solicitation, collusion or improper conduct.

3. Whether the Court below was correct in denying the various motions made by Leonard Duncan, et al., with respect to their efforts, through their attorney, Charles P. Ryan, Esq. to become engaged in and exercise control over the Cranston case through various methods and techniques.

With respect to Proposed Questions 3 and 4, such questions do not relate to the matters hereinbefore considered by the United States District Court and the Court of Appeals, but relate to matters which are presently before the District Court pursuant to the judgment and mandate of the Court of Appeals remanding the case to the District Court for appropriate judgment, and also at the direction of the District Court, before the Court of Appeals for clarification of certain parts of its decision as to the extent of the authority of the District Court to fashion an appropriate judgment in the case. Accordingly, such matters are academic and not the appropriate subjects of review by this Court.

The petitioners assert in this petition under the title, "Statutes, Rules and Regulations Involved," that this case primarily involves a question as to whether it was collusive as a matter of law or otherwise * * *. Such question, however, is not presented under that part of the petition "Questions Presented" except to whatever extent the same may be included in the first question presented, and is, therefore, subject to the same comment with respect to the correctness of the decisions of the Courts below in holding that the action in all respects was not collusive.

Counterstatement of Case.

In view of the nature and character of petitioners' Statement of Case set forth in the petition herein which contains so much irrelevant material and false and misleading statements, and omits many important matters relating to the case which are necessary for a clear presentation of the case, respondents deem it best to make a complete counterstatement instead of making page by page corrections of inaccuracies or omissions therein.

Petitioners, Leonard Duncan, et al., are members of plaintiffs' class who were also represented in the District Court by their personal attorney, Charles P. Ryan and also in some instances in the Court of Appeals by Edward J. Ryan, brother of Charles P. Ryan and one John J. Simard, an office associate, and are represented in this application for a writ of certiorari by Edward J. Ryan and John J. Simard. Charles P. Ryan was the attorney for the plaintiff Blair in the case of Blair vs. Freeman, 370 F. 2d 229, and for the plaintiffs Allen, et al., vs. Freeman, 287 F. 2d 862, which cases involved on the part of those plaintiffs, a challenge of the Farm location differential provisions contained in the New York-New Jersey and Massachusetts-Rhode Island Milk Marketing Orders respectively.

The Cranston action was commenced by Harold R. Cranston, Dale R. French and Helmer A. Carlson on February 9, 1967, joined by Roy E. Ottman, George E. Mosick, Jr., and David B. Phillips on March 1, 1967, as named plaintiffs, all being milk producers residing in the State of New York and delivering their milk to handlers under the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order. Since commencement of the action, Roy E. Ottman and George Mosick, Jr., two of the six persons originally bringing the action sought leave to withdraw as plaintiffs and were eliminated as such by the court. The first named plaintiffs' farms are located outside the area described in the Farm location differential provision in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order, Section 1015.72(a) and do not qualify for the 46 cents differential provided therein. The latter named plaintiffs' farms are located within the area described in paragraph (b) of said section and by reason thereof qualify for a 23 cent Farm location differential, but likewise, do not qualify for the 46 cent differential. The only producers qualifying for the 46 cent differential are those whose farms are within the area described in said paragraph (2) of said section. These named plaintiffs instituted this action individually and on behalf of all other persons in their class similarly situated and affected by said differential, as a "class action" as authorized by Rule 23 of the Fed. R. Civ. Pro., all such producers being aggrieved by payment of the 46 cent differential to those qualified to receive the same under the Farm location differential provision, resulting in a substantial reduction in the uniform price which such producers would otherwise receive under the Order if it were not for such differential provision in said Order.

The purpose of this action was to obtain relief in the form of a declaratory judgment declaring said Farm location differential provision unauthorized, invalid, without legal effect and unenforceable and for an injunction permanently restraining the enforcement thereof. Further, a preliminary injunction was sought restraining the enforcement thereof pending the hearing and determination of the action. The defendant Secretary of Agriculture duly appeared and defended the action. The producers whose farms are located in the area described in Section 1015.72(a) and who are qualified to receive the 46 cent Farm location differential were permitted by the Court to intervene and participate in the defense of their position. Plaintiffs' application for a preliminary injunction was granted by the Court on March 9, 1967, which directed, among other things, that the portion of the 46 cent Farm location differential in dispute be set aside by the Market Administrator in an escrow account pending the hearing and determination of the action. This has been done and a very substantial amount has accumulated in the escrow account for the benefit of those whom the court may ultimately determine to be entitled thereto.

In the regular course of procedure, various pleadings were filed and proceedings had in the action which came on for trial before Hon. William H. Timbers, Chief Judge of the District of Connecticut sitting by designation.

With respect to the named plaintiffs, the court determined, pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P., that they may properly represent the interests of those producers producing and selling milk produced on their respective farms to handlers operating under the order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut marketing area, 7 C.F.R., 1015 et seq. (1968), where the farms of such producers are located outside of the area described in 7 C.F.R. 1015.72 (a) (1968) (in short, those who do not qualify for the 46 cent differential).

With respect to the three named defendant intervenors, the court likewise determined, pursuant to Rule 23(a) and (b)(1)(B), Fed. R. Civ. P., that they may properly represent the interests of those producers producing and selling milk produced on their respective farms to handlers operating under the order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut marketing area 7 C.F.R. 1015 et seq. (1968), where the farms of such producers are located within the area described in 7 C.F.R. 1015.72 (a) (1968) (in short, those who do qualify for the 46 cent differential).

After several days of trial, the court reversed decision and directed all parties to file proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, together with briefs in support of their respective contentions. However, before the court could consider the matter and render a decision therein, various other proceedings were had, one of which concerned the class actions.

In view of the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for this Circuit in Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 391 F. 2d 555 (2 Cir. 1968), the court on April 22, 1968, directed that all members of plaintiffs' and defendant-intervenors' classes be given formal notice of the pendency of the action and an opportunity to be heard with respect to the continued maintenance of the action as a class action. The notices were sent by April 24, 1968, and made returnable on May 15, 1968.

Prior to the court's order of April 22, 1968, Kenneth Hewitt and Leonard Duncan, members of plaintiffs' class, filed two papers entitled "Motion for Leave to Intervene Under Rule 24 or to Otherwise Enter Action under Rule 23 for Purpose of Taking Depositions, to Move Dismissal of Suit for Other Related Relief," and "Answer of Intervenors and Motion to Dismiss Action, for Disposition of Escrow Fund and Other Relief."

In view of the allegations made in these various motions of collusion, adequacy of representation of plaintiffs' class and validity of class action, the court directed a hearing thereon.

The court thereafter held exhaustive hearings on May 15, May 27 and June 10, 1968, at which time all questions relating to the propriety of the maintenance of this action as a class action and all questions relating to Hewitt's and Duncan's claim of collusion were explored. Every interested person was given an opportunity to be heard and to present evidence through the testimony of witnesses and by means of exhibits. (Hearing Record Vol. I, May 15, pp. 1 through 219; Vol. II, May 27, pp. 220 through 446; Vol. III, June 10, pp. 447 through 577.)

The court, after due deliberation, rendered and filed on August 2, 1968, its findings of fact and conclusions of law, together with the court's memorandum of decision, which constituted the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Rule 52, Fed. R. Civ. Pro.

The court, by its decision, determined that the charges made by Hewitt and Duncan and their attorney with respect to the propriety and legality of the actions as a "class action" were without basis or merit and their several requests for various forms of relief in or relating to the actions were denied. The court also further determined that the action was a proper "class action" and that all requirements therefor had been made, and reaffirmed the court's order of October 20, 1967, with respect to the maintenance of this action as a class action by the plaintiffs and the defense thereof by the defendant-intervenors in all respects pursuant to Rule 23 (a) and (b), (d) (3), Fed. R. Civ. P., and determined the principal issue before the court hereinafter set forth in favor of the defendant and defendant-intervenors dismissing plaintiffs' complaint with costs, however, preserving and maintaining the preliminary injunction pending appeal from the judgment entered upon the court's decision, entered in the Office of the Clerk of the court on the 19th day of August, 1968.

The plaintiffs duly appealed on September 23, 1968, to this court from so much of said judgment entered in this action wherein and whereby final judgment was granted and entered in favor of the defendant and the defendant intervenors dismissing plaintiff's complaint with costs on the basis of the court's determination set forth in its decision rendered herein, that the Farm location differentials in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order, 7 C.F.R. Section 1015.72 (1968) are authorized by Section 8c (5)(B) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1937, 7 U.S.C. Sections 608c (5)(B) and are otherwise legal and completely valid provisions of that Order, and the denial upon such basis of a permanent injunction enjoining the Secretary of Agriculture from continuing said differentials.

Plaintiffs' appeal to the Court of Appeals was duly prosecuted and due to the large Trial Record consisting of some 1600 pages, the great number of exhibits introduced in evidence, the Secretary's Administrative Hearing Records, etc., it was necessary to submit a Joint Appendix of some 660 pages with extensive briefing by all parties. Likewise, a brief amicus curiae was filed by Charles P. Ryan, Edward J. Ryan and John J. Simard on behalf of the appellants Hewitt and Duncan and the Alliance of Northeast Dairymen which supported plaintiffs-appellants' position as to the invalidity of Farm location differentials in the Connecticut Order. Also various briefs were filed in the Court of Appeals in connection with the Duncan-Hewitt appeals. Also other material was filed by them. After argument of the case on June 12, 1968, the court continued its consideration of the appeal until its decision on July 16, 1970. During the period following the Decision of this court in Zuber, et al., vs. Allen, et al., 396 U. S. 168 on Dec. 9, 1969, all parties filed supplemental briefs and defendant-intervenors and the Secretary requested various considerations, one of which was for remand by the court to the Secretary for further administrative consideration of the differential question which was subsequently withdrawn.

The Court of Appeals by its decision determined the appeals of Hewitt and Duncan as follows:

> "Jurisdiction and venue, the propriety of a class action both as to plaintiffs and defendant-intervenors, claims of bias of the Judge, and the questioned adversary nature of the proceedings were all properly resolved by the Court."

With respect to the plaintiffs-appellants' appeal, the court determined that the challenged Farm location differential provision in the CMMO was invalid as determined by this court in the matter of Zuber and directed that the judgment below (District Court) be reversed and the case remanded to the District Court for such further proceedings, including the proper distribution of the funds held in escrow during the proceedings and the costs and related matters and the entry of judgment thereon as may be appropriate in the light of Zuber.

During the course of the prosecution of the Cranston case, Duncan, Hewitt and Russell Allen and such other persons whom they claim to be associated with them and their attorney, Charles P. Ryan, became further involved in the case than previously indicated through various motions, methods and techniques, seeking various forms of so-called relief, essentially as follows:

October 10, 1967—

Motion was filed in District Court by Mr. Ryan on behalf of Russell Allen, et al., plaintiffs in the Allen case requesting leave to intervene in the Cranston case for the limited purposes of filing motion to transfer Cranston to another jurisdiction, or in the alternative, to hold Cranston action in abeyance pending final determination of Allen (R. 162, 175, 189, 204). Motion schedule for hearing Oct. 18, 1967 at 2:30 P. M. Mr. Ryan did not appear to argue this motion, submitted his papers. Court denied motion (R. 254). Notice of Appeal thereafter on November 20, 1967 (R. 282). Appeal not prosecuted.

October 17, 1967—

Mr. Ry[illegible]filed in the Court of Appeals a "Motion for an Order P[illegible]erving Status Quo; or for Relief in Nature of Prohibition" r[illegible]ich emergency hearing was requested and granted Oct. 18, [illegible]7, at 10:30 A.M. Mr. Ryan appeared on this motion [illegible]ore this court and motion was denied.

October 18, 1967—

Mr. Ryan caused to be instituted in the District Court for the District of Columbia a suit on behalf of George H. Herrington and Kenneth H. Herrington, distant producers residing in Rensselaer County, against the Secretary of Agriculture Freeman (D. C. Civ. No. 2681-67) (R. 573) (p. 5; R. 2423). The cause of action alleged was essentially the same in and duplicative of the Cranston case.

December 13, 1967—

Mr. Ryan filed motion for summary judgment in Herrington v. Freeman in District Court for District of Columbia on basis of Blair decision (R. 573). This motion was stayed by temporary restraining order granted by Judge Timbers December 29, 1967, pending argument of motion for preliminary injunction on January 8, 1968 (R. 552). Mr. Ryan filed opposition to injunction, however, did not appear at hearing (R. 573). The injunction was granted and entered January 16, 1968 (R. 573). Subsequently, motion for summary judgment was withdrawn by Mr. Ryan in Herrington case. Appeal to this court was taken from the granting of the injunction on February 14, 1968 (R. 653). Appeal was not prosecuted.

January 2, 1968—

Mr. Ryan made a motion in District Court in the Cranston case on behalf of one Leonard Duncan, also a distant producer residing in Rensselaer County, entitled "Motion to Dismiss Action, Vacate Class Action and for Other Relief; or, in the Alternative, for Judgment;" filed a 69 page "Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Judgment" (R. 455, 456, 479). This motion was heard on January 8, 1968. Mr. Ryan did not appear; the court accepted the "Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Judgment" as a brief on the merits of the case; otherwise denying motion (R. 585). Notice of Appeal filed from decision of court February 14, 1968 (R. 654), which appeal was not prosecuted.

February , 1968—

Mr. Ryan, as counsel for Kenneth H. Herrington filed in the Court of Appeals a "Petition for a Writ of Mandamus and/or a Writ of Prohibition and Stay, or, Alternatively, for Suspension of Injunction and Stay of Proceedings Pending Appeal, etc.," Herrington & Herring- ton v. Timbers, No. 32,092, which this court, after hearing on application, denied on February 19, 1968. Application was again made for re-hearing and was denied by this court March 1, 1968.

March 5, 1968—

Mr. Ryan filed application in the Court of Appeals in an effort to revive the appeals previously taken by Russell Allen et al., v. Timbers, No. 32,151, which application was denied by the court March 18, 1968.

Not content with the lack of success in the foregoing, Mr. Ryan continued his activities with the aid of the current appellants, Hewitt and Duncan, et al., and filed in the Cranston case, as previously stated, on behalf of the appellant Leonard Duncan, et al., March , 1968, a "Motion for Leave to Intervene under Rule 24 or to Otherwise Enter the Action under Rule 23 for Purpose of Taking Depositions; to Move Dismissal of Suit and for Other Related Relief" (R. 671, 680), at the same time filing the proposed interveners' answer and motion to dismiss action and for other relief (R. 680). Also, motion for summary judgment (R. 798). These motions were not noticed for a motion day of United States District Court for the Northern District of New York nor was any time otherwise specified for their consideration. Accordingly, they were set down for hearing on May 15, 1968, by Judge Timbers in his order of April 22nd, 1968, and were considered on May 15th, May 27th and June 10th, and the relief sought therein by the movants was denied by Judge Timbers by memorandum order filed July 26, 1968.

In the interim, Kenneth Hewitt, through Attorney Ryan filed on July 17, 1968, a motion with attached affidavit of prejudice and bias requesting that Judge Timbers disqualify himself from proceeding further in the Cranston case (R. 988). This motion was denied by Judge Timbers by memorandum order filed July 26, 1968 (R. 1054).

The several motions made on behalf of the petitioners herein, Duncan, et al., and the motion made by Kenneth Hewitt for disqualification of Judge Timbers, all of which having been denied as stated, were appealed to the Court of Appeals, Second Circuit and which were determined by the affirmance of denial of the relief sought on such motions, such denial herein previously set forth.

Following the decision of the Court of Appeals, Judgment was entered thereon on the 16th day of July, 1970. Thereafter on August 3rd, 1970, motion was made by petitioners to the Court of Appeals to stay issuance of Mandate pending application to Supreme Court for a Writ of Certiorari. This motion was denied by the Court of Appeals on September 10th whereupon Mandate was issued to the District Court on September 16, 1970. On October 5, 1970, motion was made to this Court by petitioners for extension of time within which to file petition for Writ of Certiorari, which motion was granted. On December 11, 1970, petition for Writ of Certiorari was filed by petitioners in this Court.

During the interim certain proceedings were had in District Court and the Court of Appeals. On August 5, 1970, defendant-intervenors filed a motion in District Court for modification and continuation of the Court's injunctive orders of March 9, 1967. Such motion was adjourned and the District Court granted an order staying the defendant Secretary from terminatinog the Farm location differential provision in the Connecticut Order and preserving the status quo of the matter pending a hearing of the foregoing motion. The matter was adjourned to September 10th and then to September 23rd, 1970, at which time plaintiffs filed a motion with the Court for consideration of various proposals by the Court with respect to appropriate judgment for disposition of the case. Various proposals were filed and in the course of counsel's discussion of the same with the Court, both with respect to their legal and economic aspects, the Court directed counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents to make application to the Court of Appeals for clarification and supplementation of that Court's Decision of July 16, 1970, so that the District Court might be apprised as to what extent it could function with respect to exercising its discretionary and equitable powers, both with respect to directing distribution of the escrow fund and the termination of the Farm location differential provision on the basis of the facts and circumstances peculiar to the Cranston case, which were considerably different than the facts and circumstances pertaining to the Zuber case.

Pursuant to such direction counsel made arrangements with the Court of Appeals for the submission of a motion on the part of the plaintiffs-respondents for supplementation of the Court's Decision of July 16, 1970, and thereafter on October 29th duly made such motion. In the interim, notwithstanding the direction of Chief Judge Foley of District Court in the premises, Charles P. Ryan took it upon himself to file on behalf of petitioners and the Alliance of Northeast Dairymen, as amicus curiae, a motion purporting to seek clarification of the Court's decision and asking that the Court issue various directions in the matter. On November 5th, 1970, a further motion was filed by defendant-intervenors also requesting supplementation of the Court's decision. Briefs setting forth the views and contentions of all the parties respecting these motions have been filed and presently await the action of the Court of Appeals thereon. In the meantime, the matter of fashioning an appropriate judgment by the District Court is held in abeyance awaiting the action of the Court of Appeals. Likewise, the District Court Order of August 5th, preserving the status quo of the matter, is continued. Furthermore, the preliminary injunction granted by the District Court on March 9, 1967, which has been in effect throughout the litigation, is still continued and the disputed amount of differential is accruing to the benefit of the distant and intermediate producers.

ARGUMENT.

I.

The Cranston action was commenced February 9, 1967, by Messrs. Cranston, Carlson and French, distant producers under the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order and later joined therein by Messrs. Phillips, Ottman and Mesick, intermediate producers under said Order, against the then Secretary of Agriculture Freeman, in the U. S. District Court for the Northern District of New York, in good faith, with the sincere purpose of challenging the validity of the Farm location differential provision in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order; a similar provision existing in the New York-New Jersey Milk Marketing Order had been declared invalid by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and action had been commenced in the District Court for the District of Columbia attacking the validity of a similar differential in the Massachusetts-Rhode Island Milk Marketing Order. In the Cranston action venue was laid in the Northern District of New York at Albany, N. Y., as a matter of convenience in order to reduce the amount of time to be expended and expenses to be incurred in the prosecution of such a type of case and for no other reason. The commencement of the action was initiated solely at the will and instance of the first-named plaintiffs, subsequently joined by the second-named plaintiffs. As their attorney, they chose John P. Weatherwax with whom the first three named plaintiffs, as well as a great number of plaintiffs' class of producers, were personally acquainted and were aware of his law practice and specialization in milk matters for many years and his general interest in and representation of several agricultural and dairy organizations in the area.

Mr. Cranston and the other named plaintiffs are outstanding citizens and dairymen, all operating large and successful dairy farms, most of whom are active in dairy organizations, and experienced in dairy matters.

In the course of events and at the time plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction came before the District Court, certain nearby producers under the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order made application for intervention in the case which was permitted by the Court. These nearby producers were represented by attorney Frederick U. Conard, Jr., Esq., of Shipman and Goodwin, Esqs., Hartford, Conn., who was the attorney for the Connecticut Milk Producers Association, the co-operative to which many of the several classes of producers belonged and who also was involved to some extent in the litigation over the Farm location differential provision in the Blair and Allen cases and as such was opposed to the contentions of the plaintiffs in those cases and their attorney, Charles P. Ryan.

II.

The Cranston case proceeded in a normal manner in District Court, Northern District of New York, until July, 1967, when Mr. Charles P. Ryan indicated an interest in the case. In August, after a trial of the case had been directed in District Court before Hon. William H. Timbers, Mr. Ryan indicated that his prosecution of the Allen vs. Freeman case might be adversely effected thereby and this he would not permit to happen and intended to prevent it, whereupon he commenced his course of unjustified and unwarranted interference in the prosecution of the Cranston case, his avowed purpose being either to have the case transferred to the District Court of the District of Columbia where he would prosecute it according to his own methods, or by one means or another terminate the action. To support this contention reference is respectfully directed to his motions, maneuvers, and techniques to accomplish this end. While Charles P. Ryan has been the dominant legal personage in this matter, he has been assisted from time to time by his brother, Edward J. Ryan, and his office associate, John J. Simard. Notwithstanding that the latter two are slated to be counsel for the petitioners herein, it is apparent that Charles P. Ryan is the dominant figure.

Mr. Ryan's activity in the case has been aided and supported by a few young dairymen who, while operators of dairy farms, unfortunately have had limited experience and possess limited knowledge with respect to marketing milk under Federal Milk Marketing Orders and the many problems involved therein; this is particularly obvious when comparison is made with the older and more experienced men such as Mr. Cranston and others associated with him as named plaintiffs and other members of the plaintiffs' class. After the commencement of the action, Kenneth Herrington who, together with his father, operates a dairy farm not far from the Cranston farm, became offended that he was not a named plaintiff in the case; he thereupon chose to ally himself with Charles P. Ryan, whereby he would have a principal role in the matter. He thereafter encouraged certain other younger members of the plaintiffs' class of distant producers, principally Leonard Duncan, the named petitioner herein, and Kenneth Hewitt, both neighbors and friends, to join with him in Mr. Ryan's activities, which are generally indicated by the various papers filed and claims made allegedly on their behalf and contained in the record of this case. Some of these young men solicited certain other producers to join with them and participate in the hearings before Judge Timbers in District Court on May 15th, 27th and June 10th, 1968, and in recent times, at the instance of Mr. Ryan, have also made further solicitation of producers to align themselves with or support Mr. Ryan in his continued interference in the Cranston case. However, these persons are only a relative few of the approximately 240 producers comprising plaintiffs' class as of October 31, 1970, and which number has increased from November 1, 1970, by about 350 new producers, who also have entered the Connecticut Market and have become subject to the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order.

Since this Court ruled in the matter of Zuber v. Allen, 396 U. S. 168, December 9, 1969, invalidating the Farm location differential in the Massachusetts-Rhode Island Milk Marketing Order, Mr. Ryan's success was assured in that matter. Nevertheless, he has continued his unjustified and unwarranted interference in the Cranston case and has continued his assault on the parties and attorneys involved in the litigation as well as the Courts below. Mr. Ryan's pursuit of this course is an attempt to discredit all the plaintiffs, their particular action or course of action and their attorney, Mr. Weatherwax. That this course of action is predicated upon his contention that, having been successful in the Blair and Allen cases, he is entitled to credit for the success in the Cranston case of having the Farm location differential question solved favorable to the non-nearby producers who are the plaintiffs therein. Therefore, he should receive a substantial allowance, to the exclusion of Mr. Weatherwax, the attorney for the plaintiffs.

It should also be considered that Mr. Ryan had indicated his animosity towards the legal staff of the Secretary of Agriculture, members of the Justice Department; the attorneys for the defendant-intervenors and other attorneys in any way involved in this litigation and this furnishes further motivation for his continued activities.

III.

While the petition to this Court designates Edward J. Ryan and John J. Simard as the counsel for the petitioners herein and therefore responsible for the contents thereof, it would appear to those who are experienced or familiar with Charles P. Ryan's methods and techniques that he had a major role in its preparation.

Throughout the petition there exists a constant pattern of misstatements, many of which are wilfull and deliberately made in an effort to provide a basis for the granting of a Writ of Certiorari.

To point out all of the inaccuracies both in the general text as well as the footnotes would extend this brief beyond permissive standards. In support of this statement, a few of them are illustrated:

On the 1st and 2nd pages the statement is made that "over 40 'non-nearby' dairy farmers * * * who unsuccessfully attempted to intervene in the U. S. Court for the Northern District of New York to challenge the adequacy of representation in this suit and its maintenance as a class action and to seek other relief therein, humbly petition for a Writ of Certiorari to review that part of the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which upheld the Decision of the District Court denying intervention and which held that this suit was a proper class action in which the plaintiffs' class was adequately represented and accorded due process in conformity with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and that the suit was adversary in nature rather than collusive as a matter of law and otherwise, * * *." This is a false statement as to the number of persons involved. Actually the persons joining with the petitioner, Duncan, et al., in such unsuccessful attempts in the District Court were but 15. Their statement filed in the case (1a) specifically requested "the Court to dismiss this action or transfer it to the U. S. District Court for the District of Columbia, wherein the case of Herrington v. Freeman is pending at this time * * * I intend no adverse reflection on the plaintiffs or their counsel. * * *." The falsity of such statement is substantiated by a further statement appearing on pages 24 and 25 wherein it is admitted that only 16 non-nearby farmers were involved in such undertaking.

Further, petitioners persist in stating that the number of producers in plaintiffs' class is less than 100. This is also a misstatement as the records of the Court show that the notice of the hearing held in District Court on May 15th, 27th and June 10th, 1968, was sent to the approximately 215 members then of that class.

On pages 28 and 29 the statement is made that "at least 90% of those farmers in the locality of the suit who were aware of the same requested the District Court to dismiss the action. * * *". This is a false statement. The notice of the District Court sent on April 24th, 1968, and returnable on May 15th, 1968, where the matters complained of by the petitioners, Leonard Duncan, et al., were considered, was sent to each and every member of plaintiffs' class; Mr. Ryan appeared for only 15, and only seven appeared in person on the first day of the hearing (H.R. 5/15/68—pp. 50-56); only two testified, Herrington (H.R. 5/15/68—pp. 58-128) and Marbot (H.R. 5/15/68—pp. 152-161). An examination of the record will reflect that nothing of substance was stated in support of those charges made by Duncan, et al.

On page 33, the statment, regarding the hearing had in September, 1970 in District Court before Chief Judge Foley with respect to fashioning an appropriate judgment in the matter and referring to September 23rd, 1970, is made that "Upon discovery that petitioners' dairy farmer representative and one of their counsel had ascertained the existence of such hearing and were in the courtroom, the parties thereupon succeeded in removing the hearing to Chambers, and both petitioners' representative and counsel were denied permission to sit in on said hearing, * * *." This is another false statement. The facts are that on September 23, 1970, Kenneth Herrington and Charles P. Ryan were in the courtroom of U. S. District Court at Albany, N. Y., at the time the matter was called on the calendar; Mr. Herrington had been previously advised as to the hearing date by plaintiffs' counsel's office. When the Cranston case was reached Judge Foley asked for appearances in the matter; appearances were submitted on behalf of plaintiffs, Secretary of Agriculture, Department of Justice and defendant-intervenors. Judge Foley then asked if there were any other appearances to be noted by parties or counsel; neither Mr. Herrington nor Mr. Ryan noted any appearance. After some discussion concerning the matter, Judge Foley from the bench suggested that the discussion be continued in Chambers as a matter of convenience. Accordingly, Judge Foley and the parties adjourned to his Chambers. While waiting in the office adjoining Chambers and before Judge Foley entered his Chambers, Mr. Ryan and Herrington came into the room and identified themselves to Judge Foley and inquired where the Cranston matter was going to be discussed. Judge Foley asked if they were appearing in the matter; that they had not entered any appearance when he asked in Court that all interested parties note their appearance. Mr. Ryan answered in the negative and Judge Foley stated that interested parties should enter an appearance. With that, Mr. Ryan abruptly said "Thank you" and walked out of the room with Mr. Herrington. We submit that such behaviour and the purpose thereof speaks for itself.

On pages 33 and 34, the statement is made, that upon being apprised of this Court's extension of time for filing petition for Writ of Certiorari until December 12, 1970, "the parties then filed dual motions for supplementation of the Decision of the Second Circuit and further delaying tactics are being pursued in that Court in order to continue to build up the escrow fund through continued escrowing for the primary benefit of the parties' attorneys and in the hope that these petitioners will be judicially excluded from this case by denial of their petition for a Writ of Certiorari in the interim." This is another false statement and fabrication. Mr. Ryan and one or two of his clients were present in the courtroom on the hearing of October 14th, 1970. Again they made no effort to enter any appearance in the case but heard the direction of Judge Foley to counsel for respondents to make application to the Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, for clarification or supplementation of its Decision of July 16, 1970, so that the same would be a basis upon which the District Court could proceed with respect to fashioning an appropriate judgment in the case. Mr. Ryan, in an effort to forestall the action to be taken by Mr. Weatherwax, pursuant to the Court's instructions, and to further interject himself in the case, proceeded to file a so-called motion for clarification in the Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, on October 19, 1970.

It would appear that these actions on the part of Mr. Ryan were a calculated effort to produce an aura of prejudice, involving the attorneys and the Court through a continuation of the baseless charges and innuendoes.

On page 35, under the topic "Questions Presented," the statement is made, 1. * * * "when the record conclusively shows that the plaintiff Cranston was admittedly solicited to bring this suit * * *." This is a false statement as the record of testimony of the witnesses, including Cranston, consisting of dozens of pages as to conversations preceding or at about the time of the commencement of the action, conclusively established the contrary.

IV.

Petitioners have set forth in appendices to their petition, A-1, pages 1-31, what they term relevant testimony in the hearings in D. C. before Judge Timbers on May 15th, 27th and June 10th, 1968. The record of these hearings covers 574 pages and includes several exhibits with 14 witnesses testifying, only two of whom, Herrington and Marbot, were from the petitioners' group; respondents' counsel, Mr. Weatherwax, testified covering the matter of the Cranston litigation from the beginning to that date and was cross examined by Mr. Ryan. His direct testimony appears in the records at pages 373-413, with cross at pages 414-441. However, notwithstanding the volume of such testimony and the nature thereof, petitioners have failed to provide the Court with the truly relevant portions thereof which conclusively establish the complete invalidity of petitioners' contentions whether made directly or inferentially; nor do petitioners as a part of this application for a Writ of Certiorari file any part of the record of the proceedings in the case in the courts below in support of their contentions set forth in their petition, but on the contrary, resort to their so-called portions of hearings consisting of excerpts of testimony of various witnesses on the hearings held May 15th, May 27th and June 10th, taken for the most part out of context and selected and isolated from other parts of the witnesses' testimony. These excerpts are interspersed with commentary, supplementing the actual testimony of the witnesses with his conclusions and/or inferences as to what the witnesses intended and the purport of their testimony. Also set forth are characterizations as to the character and/or truthfulness of the testimony and generally a species summary of all the testimony to discredit all the parties to the Cranston case, their attorneys and even the court, in an effort to accomplish the objectives sought herein in utter disregard of the welfare and best interests of the plaintiffs and their class.

A review of the testimony on the hearing will disclose that petitioners failed to produce one iota of evidence to establish solicitation, collusion or improper conduct on the part of any of the parties or their counsel. Further, the affirmative proof by all of the parties' witnesses completely refuted all charges of wrong-doing or impropriety and negated any and all such claims or inferences. In addition the testimony established that the inferences by petitioners and their counsel were unjustified and without merit and were for ulterior motives.

On the trial, the Court had the opportunity to observe and hear the testimony of several of the named plaintiffs; it would appear they were middle-aged dairy farmers having sufficient and adequate knowledge of the industry and the problems thereof; that they had an interest in the subject of the litigation and, with the aid of their counsel, would adequately represent the members of the class adversely affected by reason of the operation of the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order with the Farm location differential provision therein. Their ability, integrity and interest was not challenged. When questioned, Herrington admitted that he had known Mr. Cranston for about 10 years; that he had talked to him on many occasions about dairying matters; that he never knew him to do anything dishonest or had he ever heard of him doing anything dishonest; that Mr. Cranston enjoyed a good reputation in the community for truth and honesty (R. 5/15/68, p. 73).

The professional character, ability and competency of Mr. Weatherwax in milk matters was not questioned by anyone except to the extent that Mr. Ryan endeavored to substitute his judgment in handling the Cranston case for that of Mr. Weatherwax. The persons for whom Mr. Ryan appeared and who filed with the Court a statement requesting the Court to dismiss the Cranston case or transfer it to the USDC for the D/C specifically stated that no adverse reflection was intended on the plaintiffs or their counsel (Statement of Parties, 1a).

It would appear that any collusion in this action must occur between the plaintiffs herein and their attorneys, and the Secretary of Agriculture and his attorneys; further, the question of collusion would necessarily involve the Judges participating in the case; and all other parties and their legal representatives. Such assumptions or even innuendoes stagger credulity and render such claims ridiculous.

To conclude this phase of argument in opposition to the petition herein, respondents respectfully submit that the District Court, after a full hearing and review of the evidence before it, in its Memorandum of Decision after trial on the subject of the propriety of the class action, adversary nature of the proceedings, fairness and adequacy of representation of the class (Joint Appendix—Court of Appeals 93a-99a) and the Court's Findings of Fact Nos. 1 through 6 (Joint Appendix—85a-87a), and its judgment based thereon, amply establishes the lack of merit of petitioners' contentions. Further, it establishes that respondents, their counsel, the defendant-intervenors and their counsel and the defendant Secretary of Agriculture and his counsel all acted in a proper manner, and the action was a proper class action prosecuted in the interests of plaintiffs' class. The determinations of the District Court, as well as those of the Court of Appeals, were based on a full and complete record of the hearings wherein all petitioners' matters of complaint were heard, considered and determined according to the applicable provisions of law and Rules of Federal Procedure, which determinations were amply supported by legal competent evidence and all the requisites of due process were met. Respondents respectfully submit upon such basis that there is no valid reason, either assigned in the petition or otherwise, to justify the granting of the Writ of Certiorari prayed for herein.

Petitioners' continued reference to an agreement to pay respondents' counsel reasonable attorneys fees or to reimburse them therefor is a deliberate misstatement of the purport of certain conversations had between officials of CMPA and Mr. Cranston at or about the time of the commencement of the action. This was in regard to the support to which the minority members of CMPA might be entitled in the event their litigation to invalidate the Farm location differential FLD provision in the Connecticut Order was unsuccessful inasmuch as CMPA intended to support their majority membership in opposing any such litigation. Plaintiffs' class both in distant and intermediate areas are made up not only of CMPA members but also members of Dairylea Cooperative Co., Inc., Eastern Milk Producers Assoc., Inc., and other producer organizations serving the market.

However, notwithstanding, Petitioners submit as a legal proposition that payment by one side in an action of opposing counsel's fees could well support a charge of collusion and cite the case of Gardner v. Goodyear, 131 U. S. App. ciii (1873). Also, the case of U. S. et al., v. Johnson, 319 U. S. 302. It is submitted that the holdings in those cases related to the peculiar facts therein, and have no application whatsoever in this action; in the instant case the facts and circumstances of the action, and the parties, are entirely dissimilar. Perhaps the best way to express the situation in this case is to quote from the decision of Judge Timbers, trusting it meets with the approval of this Court.

"(1) The Court is fully cognizant that the payment by one side in an action of an opposing counsel's legal fees is a red flag as to collusion. See United States v. Johnson, 319 U. S. 302 (1943). But in the instant situation, the Association is in a unique position—it is a democratic institution composed of members on both sides of the question and it is duty-bound to serve the interests of all its members. Certainly under these circumstances, the Association's offer to reimburse any of its members for expenses does not give rise to collusion per se. Rather, the question must be whether the Association has in any way acted to control plaintiffs' conduct of the lawsuit. Cf. San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal. 2d 655, 140 P. 2d 666 (1943). If the Court thought that there was even the slightest attempt to exert such control, it would not only reverse its class action orders but it would dismiss the entire action. The Court, however, is thoroughly convinced that no such attempt was made, that the proceedings have been of an adversary nature on the highest level, and that plaintiffs have fairly and more than adequately represented the other members of their class. The Court therefore not only refuses to dismiss this action but reaffirms its decision to permit it to proceed as a class action."

In San Francisco v. Boyd, supra, the Court held that in original mandamus proceedings in Supreme Court by City and County of San Francisco and another against the Comptroller to compel audit and approval of wage claim, evidence showed that the proceeding was not "collusive," notwithstanding that a fee for counsel for both sides would be paid from public funds.

In the case of Re Insull Utility Investments, D. C. Illinois 1933, 6 F. Supp. 653, which concerned bankruptcy matters, the question of collusion came under consideration and the subject in general is quite extensively discussed at pages 655-656. The definition of collusion in judicial proceedings is defined in 15 C. J. S., page 394, as:

> "A secret agreement between two or more persons whose interests are apparently conflicting to make use of the forms and proceedings of the law in order to defraud a third person, or to obtain that which justice would not give them, by deceiving a Court or officers;"

Respondents submit that, aside from the nonexistence of collusion on a factual basis, there can be and is no collusion in the Cranston action on a legal basis.

Respondents further submit that, with respect to the class action question, the action of the Court in sustaining the same was proper, both under the F. R. Civ. Pro. and the case law concerning class actions. All requirements to meet the standard have been met as determined by the Court below.

Hansberry, et al., v. Lee, et al., 311 U. S. 32, 42-43 (1940).

Conclusion.

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the petition herein for a Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

Civil Action No. 67 CV 38

I, the undersigned member of the plaintiffs' class, do hereby say that I favor the abolishment of the nearby differential of the Connecticut milk marketing order, but that I request the Court to dismiss this action or transfer it to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia wherein the case of Herrington v. Freeman is pending at this time. I have received the Notice directed to be furnished to the plaintiffs' class, and the same fails to advise as to any of the matters bearing on the question of adequacy of representation herein. In view of the circumstances surrounding this suit, as attributed to the plaintiff Cranston and which I understand has never been denied by any of the parties or participants in this case, I am of the opinion that this suit should not be maintained but should be dismissed, particularly as it attempts to affect my rights or property. I intend no adverse reflection on the plaintiffs or their counsel, but I feel that an appearance of impropriety should not be sanctioned and that the procedure contemplated by the court at this time unfairly places the burden of showing inadequacy of representation upon myself rather than placing the burden of showing adequate representation upon those who are acting in such capacity and have failed to inform, explain, or deny in respect to the matters set forth by Duncan and Hewitt and in the prior papers.

Motion for Supplementation of the Court's Decision Herein of July 16, 1970.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS, and

ALBERT GUELIAN, GROVER C. ATWOOD and A. J. MALNATI, Individually and on behalf of all other persons in their class who are similarly situated and affected, Defendant-Intervenors.

Nos. 32, 793-796

Plaintiffs-appellants respectfully move this Court on the basis of the attached affidavit of John P. Weathewax, sworn to on the 28th day of October, 1970 and the Exhibits annexed thereto, and upon such other portions of the record herein as may be pertinent, for supplementation of its Decision herein of July 16, 1970, in the following respects:

1. With respect to the expression therein, i. e., "and the entry of Judgment thereon as may be appropriate in the light of Zuber", so as to indicate whether that portion thereof, i. e., "in the light of Zuber", indicates or signifies anything more than the Court has determined on the basis of the decision of the Supreme Court in affirming the decision of the Court of Appeals (D.C. Cir.), that the Farm location differential provision contained in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order, the subject of this litigation, was invalid and that the Judgment to the contrary of the District Court was reversed, thereby leaving to the District Court, to which the case was remanded for appropriate judgment, the authority to fashion such a judgment without being confined to fashioning the same on the same basis as used in Zuber, with respect to:

A. the disposition of funds held in escrow during the proceedings;

B. the issuance of a permanent injunction against further payments of the Farm location differential, on the basis of the facts and circumstances peculiar to this case, including the full use of the Court's broad equity powers as in its judgment is necessary or desirable to terminate this litigation in what would be deemed to be in the best interests of all parties thereto and the general public that may be affected thereby, which might include the use of the Court's broad equity powers to the extent of the withholding of the issuance of a permanent injunction immediately terminating further payments of the Farm location differential in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order and permitting the termination of said provision on a graduated or phase-out basis such as or similar to the proposals in the Proposed Judgment presently before the Court. (Exhibit "C")

2. That the Court further supplement its Decision in such further respects as it may determine to be appropriate to facilitate the proper disposition of this case in the light of its Decision.

It is further respectfully requested that this motion receive early consideration by the Court as soon as it may be conveniently done, and that the Court will permit, that a limited hearing for discussion of the matter be allowed, or in the alternative, to allow the parties to file a memorandum respecting their views.

Civil Action No. 67 CV 38

To All Milk Producers Delivering to Handlers Under the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order of the United States Department of Agriculture:

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN: That on February 9, 1967 Harold R. Cranston, Dale R. French and Helmer A. Carlson, joined on March 1, 1967 by Roy E. Ottman, George Mesick, Jr. and David B. Phillips, milk producers residing in New York State and plaintiffs herein, filed suit against Orville L. Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, seeking a declaratory judgment invalidating the farm location differential provisions of the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order and seeking to enjoin the application of such provisions by the Secretary of Agriculture. On March 9, 1967, this Court issued a preliminary injunction requiring that the amounts constituting those portions of the farm location differentials which, in the event of the invalidity of the differential provisions, may accrue to the plaintiffs and their class, be placed in escrow subject to further order of this Court pending disposition of this proceeding.

Plaintiffs have filed this action on their own behalf, and as a class action on behalf of all other dairy farmers similarly situated, i. e., those whose farms are located outside the area described in 7 C.F.R. 1015.72(a) (being the so-called nearby area). These plaintiffs are represented by John P. Weatherwax, 310-15 Cannon Building, Troy, New York.

On March 9, 1967, Albert Guilian, Grover C. Atwood and A. J. Malnati, milk producers residing in Connecticut and Massachusetts, were granted leave to intervene in this proceeding as defendants, on behalf of themselves and all other dairy farmers similarly situated, i. e., those whose farms are located within the so-called nearby area and whose interest is in preserving the differential. These defendant-intervenors are represented by Frederick U. Conard, Jr., of Shipman and Goodwin, 799 Main Street, Hartford, Connecticut.

The defendant Secretary of Agriculture is represented by the United States Attorney for the Northern District of New York, Justin J. Mahoney, Federal Building, Albany, New York.

On October 27, 1967, following seven days of testimony and after several preliminary proceedings, trial in this case was concluded. Evidence was submitted at the trial on behalf of all parties to the proceeding. The parties also have filed briefs and proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law.

This notice is to advise you of the pendency of this proceeding and to provide you with an opportunity, if you so desire, to show cause to come before this Court and demonstrate why this proceeding should not continue as a class action in which your interests will be fairly and adequately represented by the existing parties. Accordingly,

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that:

1. Unless the Court receives a written communication from you on or before May 9, 1968, the Court will assume that you do not object to being represented by one of the existing parties to this proceeding and their counsel. Thus, those who do not object will continue to be represented by counsel already participating on behalf of their class. Any communications with the Court as hereinafter specified should be addressed to W. Arthur Dwyer, Clerk, United States District Court, Northern District of New York, Federal Building, Utica, New York 13503.

2. Those persons to whom this notice is sent and who believe that their interests in the subject matter of this action are or may be different from other dairy farmers similarly situated or who believe that their interests are not being fairly and adequately represented by counsel for their class should advise this Court by written communication (mailing copies to each of the counsel noted above) on or before May 9, 1968. Those who so advise the Court may, if they wish, appear in person or by counsel at a hearing to be held by this Court in Albany, New York, at 10:30 a.m. on May 15, 1968 at the United States District Court, Federal Building, Albany, New York, to show cause as to the precise manner in which their interests are or may be different from others similarly situated or in which their interests are not being fairly and adequately represented by existing counsel.

3. To facilitate a full and ample opportunity for all recipients of this notice who so desire to familiarize themselves with the proceedings to date, the complete record of those proceedings has been deposited in the chambers of the United States District Judge, located in the Federal Building, Albany, New York. This record is available for public inspection during normal business hours.

4. Bearing in mind that the sole and limited purpose of the above noted hearing is to consider and receive evidence regarding any claims of differing interests within the respective classes or any claims with respect to the fairness and adequacy of the existing representation and in order to prevent undue delay, the following procedures will be observed by this Court. First, any recipient of this notice wishing to be heard on the above issues and notifying this Court within the time set forth above, should be prepared to submit probative evidence or testimony under oath at the hearing, subject to cross-examination, to support his claim. While the Court has indicated a willingness to receive solely written communications, it is not prepared, in the absence of unusual and compelling circumstances, to weigh such communications heavily in the absence of the above submission at the hearing. Second, with the concurrence of this Court, the existing parties to this proceeding have agreed that one or more of the plaintiffs, including Harold R. Cranston, and one or more of the defendant-intervenors, as well as counsel for all parties, will be present at the hearing and will be available for questioning by the Court, or by counsel upon good cause shown. Third, by written request to this Court on or before May 6, 1968, with service to all interested parties, any person receiving this notice may request the availability of additional witnesses at the hearing pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, provided good cause is demonstrated therefor. After opportunity for objection by any interested party, the Court will determine whether or not the presence of such witnesses is required. Fourth, since the need for expedition in this case has already been established, the Court will not permit any unreasonable delays in these proceedings nor any action by any party or his counsel which the Court believes is intended to promote such delay.

5. No recipient of this notice is required to take any action in the event he is satisfied to have his interest in the farm location differential, either for or against its validity in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order, be determined through one or more of the existing parties and their counsel in this proceeding.

No. 1089

LEONARD DUNCAN, ET AL., Petitioners,

v.

HAROLD CRANSTON, ET AL., and ALBERT GUILIAN, ET AL., and CLIFFORD M. HARDIN, Secretary of Agriculture, Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

---

BRIEF OF RESPONDENTS ALBERT GUILIAN, ET AL. IN OPPOSITION

OPINION BELOW

The Petition correctly states that jurisdiction in this Court rests upon a Per Curiam opinion and judgment of the Court of Appeals entered on July 16, 1970, and reported at 428 F.2d 822. The portions of the District Court decision pertinent to the Petition, which were affirmed by the Court of Appeals, are reported at 290 F. Supp. 785 (1968). The interlocutory matters currently pending in the District Court which are referred to in the "Opinions Below" portion of the Petition are not a part of the opinion below and thus are not ripe for review by this Court.

JURISDICTION

As will appear further in the Argument of Respondents Guilian, et al. below, it is respectfully submitted, contrary to assertions in the Petition, that the jurisdiction of this Court to consider Questions 3 and 4 presented in the Petition is doubtful in light of the absence of any decision below on these questions. Moreover, these questions are not now ripe for review in view of their pendency before the lower Courts. With respect to Questions 1 and 2 presented in the Petition, the jurisdictional prerequisites are adequately set forth in the Petition.

COUNTERSTATEMENT CONCERNING QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Questions 1 and 2 presented in the Petition set forth and rest upon the proposition that certain stated factual allegations, "and others" which are unstated, were "conclusively" shown in the record below. Those allegations were not only not "conclusively" shown below, but were specifically rebutted in the extensive hearings before the District Court, and were negated by the ultimate findings of fact of the District Court based upon the full record before it. Questions 1 and 2 consequently amount to attacks upon subsidiary and ultimate findings of fact of the District Court which were unanimously affirmed in all respects by the Court of Appeals. Accordingly, only if this Court is prepared to review these findings of fact of the District Court can it approach the remaining aspects of Questions 1 and 2.

Since the Petitioners have not sought, in other than an ex parte, informal manner, to participate in the proceedings in the District Court following the decision of the Court of Appeals, and since in any case the matters complained of with respect to those proceedings have not been appealed to the Court of Appeals, this Court would appear to have no jurisdiction to consider Questions 3 and 4. Consideration of those questions would in any event appear to be inconsistent with the orderly administration of justice.[1]

All four questions presented would appear to be inconsistent with the requirements of Rule 23 of this Court's Rules.

[1] The only questions which could possibly be raised by these petitions relate to the Court of Appeals' holding that

> "Jurisdiction and venue, the propriety of a class action both as to plaintiffs and intervenor-defendants, claims of bias of the Judge, and the questioned adversary nature of the proceedings were all properly resolved by the Court."

In this connection, Respondents Guilian, et al.'s brief below included the following questions in its "Counterstatement of Issues Presented."

> "2. Whether the procedure adopted by the District Court for determining the validity of the various claims of the appellants Duncan, et al., and, more generally, the propriety of the class action orders entered by it, was fair and proper, where provision was made for reasonable notice to all interested parties, and where all interested parties appearing in response to the notice were given full latitude to present their various contentions to the court both in full adversary hearings and in briefs filed thereafter.
> "3. Whether the District Court was correct in determining that the case of Cranston v. Hardin is a genuine adversary proceeding in all respects, and neither collusive nor otherwise improper, and further in determining that it possessed jurisdiction to decide the case upon its merits in all respects, where there was no showing of collusion or other impropriety, where the evidence demonstrated that the case was fully adversary in nature, and where the interests of the plaintiffs' class therein were represented fully, fairly and adequately."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The main case and parties in the Courts below

The Plaintiffs below, Respondents Harold R. Cranston, et al., intermediate and distant producers under the nearby farm location differential provisions of the Federal Milk Order for the Connecticut Milk Marketing Order (7 CFR § 1015.72), brought the main case on February 9, 1967, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York. Their complaint contended that the Secretary of Agriculture in promulgating the farm location differential provisions in his Connecticut marketing area order exceeded the statutory authority granted him in the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937.

On March 9, 1967, Respondent Albert Guilian, et al., nearby producers benefited by the contested provision, were granted intervention on the side of the Defendant Secretary. On the same day, Chief Judge Foley entered a preliminary injunction providing for escrowing of differential monies during the pendency of the action. In early August, 1967, Chief Judge Foley assigned the case to Hon. William H. Timbers, Chief Judge of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut, who was then sitting by designation in the Northern District. Trial of the case commenced before Judge Timbers on August 10, 1967, at which time the Defendant Secretary introduced into evidence the administrative hearing records on which the Connecticut Order is based. (R. 1161).[2] Thereafter, following delays occasioned by the conflicting schedules of the various counsel involved in the case, trial resumed on October 18, 1967, in Albany.

On October 30, 1967, in the course of trial, Judge Timbers entered class action orders pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (1966) finding Plaintiffs Cranston, et al. proper representatives of their class of non-nearby intermediate and distant producers disadvantaged by the operation of the provision in controversy, and Defendant-Intervenors Guilian, et al. proper representatives of the "nearby" producers who receive the full differential. (R. 269, 271).

Following completion of a seven-day trial on October 27, 1967, and extensive briefing on the merits of the case by the parties, the District Court on August 2, 1968, in a decision which is reported at 290 F. Supp. 785 (1968), upheld the legality of the differential provision in all respects. The Plaintiffs then took an appeal to the Court of Appeals. Oral argument on their appeal was held on June 12, 1969. Following the decision of this Court in Zuber v. Allen, 396 U.S. 168 (1969), and the parties' filing of several memoranda concerning an appropriate remedy in view of that decision, the Court of Appeals, on July 16, 1970, reversed and remanded the case for such proceedings as might be appropriate in the light of Zuber v. Allen.

The background of the Petition: participation of Petitioners and their counsel in the main case below [3]

The Petition stems from an order entered by the District Court in its Memorandum of Decision after Trial on August 2, 1968 reaffirming its class action orders of October 20, 1967. While the Court's Memorandum of Decision sets forth in some detail the background of this order (Petitioners' Appendix, pp. G2-G8), the relationship of Petitioners and their counsel in the Courts below, Attorney Charles P. Ryan of the bar of the District of Columbia,[4] to this case can perhaps be understood more fully in the light of a series of proceedings involving Petitioners' counsel below which preceded the chain of events traced in the District Court's Memorandum of Decision. The expressed purpose of the Petitioners' counsel filings therein was to transfer or hold up the Cranston proceedings pending the determination in the courts of the District of Columbia of the related Allen case.

The District Court's findings of fact in enjoining Kenneth H. Herrington and George H. Herrington

[3] While they doubt the relevance at this juncture of much of Petitioners' lengthy "Statement of the Case," especially those portions dealing with a number of Massachusetts-Rhode Island and Connecticut order distant producers who are not among the present Petitioners and who have in several instances failed to prosecute appeals from allegedly erroneous actions of the District Court, Respondents do believe that a relatively brief description of the participation of Petitioners and their counsel in the case below would assist the Court in evaluating both the legitimacy and the good faith of their extensive and confusing claims.

[4] Although Attorney Charles P. Ryan is not listed as one of the counsel representing Petitioners, he is in the same office and has apparently worked closely throughout this case with Petitioners' Attorneys Edward J. Ryan and John J. Simard, both of whom have participated with him in the representation of Petitioners in the Court below.

from further prosecuting a suit duplicative of the Cranston action in the U. S. District Court for the District of Columbia summarize in a concise manner Attorney Ryan's participation in the Cranston case prior to the date of the injunction, January 16, 1968. The pertinent findings, Nos. 5-18, are therefore set forth in the Appendix to this brief (Appendix, pp. 2a-5a) and need not be repeated here.

Following entry of the District Court's injunction on January 16, 1968, and in accordance with it, Attorney Ryan withdrew the Herringtons' motion for summary judgment in the District Court for the District of Columbia. On February 14, 1968, he noticed an appeal to the Court of Appeals on behalf of the Herringtons, but subsequently failed to prosecute it in accordance with the applicable procedural rules.

At the time of issuance of the preliminary injunction against the Herringtons, the District Court also dealt with pleadings of Leonard Duncan, one of the present Petitioners, again represented by Attorney Ryan. These pleadings included a "Motion to Dismiss Action, Vacate Class Order and for Other Relief; or, in Alternative, for Judgment"; a "Statement of Material Facts as to Which There Is No Genuine Issue" and a 69-page "Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion for Judgment" [5] (R. 455, 456, 479), and were heard by the Court, Attorney Ryan absent, with Respondent Guilian, et. al's "Motion for Preliminary Injunction," on January 8. In an order dated [5] This memorandum was virtually identical in content to the "Motion for Summary Judgment and for Relief in the Nature of Mandamus" filed on behalf of the Herringtons in the District Court for the District of Columbia on December 13, 1967.

January 15, 1968, (R. 585), the Court accepted the 69-page "Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Judgment" of Petitioner Duncan as a brief on the merits of the case, but denied the remainder of his requests for relief. (R. 585) Once again, an appeal was noticed by Attorney Ryan (on February 14, 1968, R. 654), but not prosecuted in accordance with the applicable procedural rules.

While Attorney Ryan failed to prosecute the February, 1968, appeals of producers Duncan and George and Kenneth Herrington, he did file two lengthy extraordinary writs against the District Court with the Court of Appeals in February and March of 1968. A "Petition for a Writ of Mandamus and/or a Writ of Prohibition and Stay, or, Alternatively, for Suspension of Injunction and Stay of Proceedings Pending Appeal, etc." (No. 32,092) on behalf of Kenneth H. Herrington was denied from the bench after hearing by a panel of the Court of Appeals (Circuit Judges Friendly and Smith and District Judge Gignoux) on February 19, 1968. The Court's denial of a petition for rehearing of this petition on March 1, 1968, was, in turn, followed by a "Petition for a Writ of Mandamus and/or Prohibition and a Stay" (No. 32,151) on March 5, 1968, in which Attorney Ryan attempted in effect to revive long dormant appeals of Russell Allen, et al. from the District Court's action of October 18, 1967 denying them intervention. (See Appendix, p. 3a) This Petition was denied by the Court of Appeals on March 18, 1968. (Circuit Judges Lumbard and Friendly and District Judge Clarie).

It was only at this point in time that Attorney Ryan commenced to file the papers which are the subject of the present appeals. In late March, acting on behalf of Leonard Duncan and Kenneth Hewitt, both Connecticut market distant producers, Attorney Ryan filed a "Motion for Leave to Intervene Under Rule 24 or to Otherwise Enter the Action Under Rule 23 for Purpose of Taking Deposition, to Move Dismissal of Suit and for Other Related Relief" (R. 671), together with an "Answer of Interveners and Motion to Dismiss Action, for Disposition of Escrow Fund and Other Relief" (R. 680). These pleadings set forth in some detail allegations apparently intended to suggest various improprieties by all parties to the Cranston case.

The District Court's order of notice and hearing of April 22, 1968, the hearings and the Court's findings based on those hearings

The District Court's opinion and findings of fact set forth in sufficient detail that Court's action with respect to the Duncan and Hewitt papers (see Petitioners' Appendix G).

Fourteen witnesses testified at the hearings conducted by the Court in May and June of 1968 and numerous exhibits were received by the Court. The trial transcript ran to 575 pages and in excess of 150 pages of briefs and other papers were thereafter filed by the various participants in the hearings.

In its decision handed down on August 2, 1968, the District Court made detailed findings with respect to the issues raised in the May and June hearings, fully reaffirming its earlier class action orders and denying the relief sought by Kenneth Hewitt and Leonard Duncan. The Court's opinion and findings are set forth in Petitioners' Appendix G.[6]

Proceedings since the District Court's decision

Petitioners filed a notice of appeal to the Court of Appeals on August 30, 1968 (R. 2554). On July 16, 1970, the Court of Appeals upheld the District Court's determination as to the Duncan and Hewitt claims, stating:

> "Jurisdiction and venue, the propriety of a class action both as to plaintiffs and intervener defendants, claims of bias of the Judge and the questioned adversary nature of the proceedings were all properly resolved by the court." (Petitioners' Appendix C).

A motion for stay of the Court of Appeals' mandate on behalf of Duncan, et al. was denied by the Court of Appeals on September 10, and the mandate subsequently issued.

On October 5, 1970, counsel for Petitioners Duncan, et al. filed a "motion for an extension of time" for the filing of their Petition in this Court. The motion was granted on October 8, 1970 by Mr. Justice Harlan. On December 18, 1970, Petitioners moved this Court for a stay of mandate. The motion was denied by Mr. Justice Harlan on December 19, 1970.

[6] On July 17, 1968, Attorney Ryan filed, on behalf of Kenneth Hewitt, a motion seeking disqualification of Judge Timbers from hearing the case (R. 988, 990), with a 38-page affidavit of prejudice and bias attached thereto. The Motion was denied by Memorandum Order dated July 26, 1968 (R. 1054), the Court finding it to be legally insufficient, untimely filed, technically insufficient as lacking a proper certificate of good faith by local counsel and "utterly frivolous." This determination was affirmed by the Court of Appeals; no petition for certiorari has been filed and the time for such a petition has expired.

ARGUMENT

Introduction

This case is not an appropriate one for grant of certiorari. There is no conflict with decisions of this or any other court. Petitioners attempt in their Petition to alter the facts of the case and in doing so largely ignore the District Court's extensive findings of fact and discussion of the relevant issues of law. This approach underscores the inapplicability of the assertions of law contained in their papers.

Nor does the Petition present an important federal question. No other cases are cited which might be affected by the disposition of this case by the Courts below. Moreover, Petitioners' extensive attempts to alter the facts below and therefore to alter the ramifications of the lower Courts' decisions only serve to further confirm that the decisions below turn on a close examination of a particular set of facts rather than on an unprincipled departure from the canons of wise adjudication.

Finally, the decision of the Court of Appeals affirming the findings and conclusions of the District Court was correct. It is fully supported by the evidence of record and consistent with relevant precedent.

I. THE COURT OF APPEALS WAS CORRECT IN AFFIRMING THE DISTRICT COURT'S DECISION. THIS CASE IS NOT APPROPRIATE FOR GRANT OF CERTIORARI.

A. The District Court's findings of fact, affirmed by the Court of Appeals, are fully supported by the evidence of record below.

Petitioners, who are members of the Plaintiffs' class in whose favor judgment on the merits has been decreed by the Court of Appeals, complain here with respect to the District Court's findings of fact on jurisdictional and procedural issues raised by them at the District Court level. Those District Court findings were based on extensive hearings before that Court and have been unanimously affirmed by the Court of Appeals. Petitioners' assault on them simply ignores most of the evidence of record in this case and proceeds to exaggerate and distort the significance of a few portions of the record in an attempt to weave again the same fabric of allegations as that firmly rejected by the Courts below. Because of their reliance upon factual contentions unsuccessfully advanced by them in the Courts below, and because of the gross discrepancy between the claims made in the Petition and the proven facts of record, it would appear to Respondents Guilian, et al. that this case is not an appropriate one for certiorari.

Petitioners' claims, throughout this case, have, in fact, gone considerably beyond the bounds of propriety, and boil down to a wholesale and irresponsible assault upon the integrity of both the other parties here and the Courts below. Their continuing attacks upon the District Court amount to little more than a renewal of Petitioner Kenneth Hewitt's now discarded claim that the District Court was biased throughout the Cranston proceeding.

It would be a virtually impossible task, even in a full brief on the merits, to deal fully with every claim, allegation, innuendo and misrepresentation to be found in the Petition. It should, however, be observed that the principal targets of Petitioners' onslaught all testified, both on direct and cross-examination, at great length and in detail as to their participation in the case. Petitioners, where they do not ignore this testimony, apparently simply claim it to be untrue and the product of some great conspiracy among the parties. Such an approach is both improper and amounts to an admission that the evidence on any balanced reading does not support their allegations.

B. The lower Court's determinations of law, based upon the District Court's findings of fact, are correct.

The legal issues raised by Petitioners were fully briefed before the Courts below. The proper resolution of these issues was dependent upon the initial resolution of the extensive factual issues raised by the Petitioners below and echoed in their Petition here. The District Court's discussion of the law applicable to the facts found by it is to the point and clearly correct:

> "The Court is fully cognizant that the payment by one side in an action of an opposing counsel's legal fees is a red flag as to collusion. See United States v. Johnson, 319 U.S. 302 (1943). But in the instant situation, the Association is in a unique position—it is a democratic institution composed of members on both sides of the question and it is duty-bound to serve the interests of all its members for expenses does not give rise to collusion per Association's offer to reimburse any of its members for expenses does not give use to collusion per se. Rather, the question must be whether the Association has in any way acted to control plaintiffs' conduct of the law suit. Cf. San Francisco v. Boyd, 22 Cal. 2d 685, 140 P. 2d 666 (1943). If the Court thought that there was even the slightest attempt to exert such control, it would not only reverse its class action orders but it would dismiss the entire action. The Court, however, is thoroughly convinced that no such attempt was made, that the proceedings have been of an adversary nature on the highest level, and that plaintiffs have fairly and more than adequately represented the other members of their class. The Court therefore not only refuses to dismiss this action but reaffirms its decision to permit it to proceed as a class action."

Petitioners rely solely upon the case of Gardner v. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co., 131 U.S. Append. ciii (1873). This case was fully considered by the Courts below; it was fully briefed by all parties and both the Johnson and Boyd cases cited by the District Court deal with the Gardner rule. Gardner bears no factual resemblance to the instant case and thus its rule of law, appropriate in its context, is of no relevance to this case.

C. The procedure adopted by the District Court, which included both notice and hearing, was fair and proper in all respects.

The District Court's order of notice afforded all interested parties due process. The Court's procedure was appropriate and fair. It accorded all interested parties adequate opportunity to ensure that their rights were properly protected.

The primary concern, in considering whether constitutional due process has been observed in a representative action, is to determine whether the members of the class have been in fact adequately represented by the parties who are present. Hansberry v. Lee, 311 U.S. 32, 42-43 (1940). This requirement is reflected in Rule 23(a) (4), which states that a class action may be maintained where, inter alia, "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." This constitutional requirement was respected by the Court below in the procedure ordered by it in its order of notice and in the hearings conducted by it thereafter.

II. THE STILL INCOMPLETE REMAND PROCEEDINGS IN THE DISTRICT COURT ARE NOT RIPE FOR REVIEW.

Questions 3 and 4 presented in the Petition constitute attacks on hypothetical prospective actions by the District Court growing out of proceedings presently pending before that Court. The Court of Appeals has directed that these proceedings be conducted in the light of Zuber v. Allen and presumably the District Court will act in accordance with that direction. In any case, review—or, more accurately, predetermination—by this Court of these proceedings would not appear to lie at this point in time, and, even if it does arguably lie, would not seem consistent with the orderly administration of justice.

While Petitioners apparently claim to have had an ex parte conversation with Chief Judge Foley with respect to their participation in the proceedings in the District Court, Respondents are aware of no papers or oral motions seeking intervention or other participation there filed by Petitioners in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. There is thus as well considerable question even as to their standing to challenge the remand proceedings in the District Court at this juncture.[7]

It is therefore clear that grant of the Petition with respect to Questions 3 and 4 presented in it would be inappropriate.

[7] The representative parties below have advised the District Court that they intend to notify all members of the opposing classes of the terms of any proposed final judgment in the case, and to provide them with an opportunity, at hearing, to present any questions or objections concerning such judgment to Chief Judge Foley. Petitioners will therefore be allowed to present any criticisms they may have of such judgment, including any provision for legal fees, to the District Court.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Petition should be denied in all respects.

Excerpts from Findings of Fact in Support of Preliminary Injunction Issued by District Court January 16, 1968

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Civil No. 67-CV-38

HAROLD R. CRANSTON, DALE R. FRENCH, HELMER A. CARLSON, ROY E. OTTMAN, GEORGE MESICK, JR., and DAVID B. PHILLIPS, Individually and on behalf of all other persons in their class who are similarly situated and affected, Plaintiffs,

v.

ORVILLE L. FREEMAN, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, Defendant,

ALBERT GUILIAN, GROVER C. ATWOOD and A. J. MALNATI, Defendant-Interveners.

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

This cause came on to be heard on Defendant Interveners' motion for a preliminary injunction, and the Court having considered the verified motion, having received in evidence and considered certain copies of documents relating to the case of Herrington and Herrington v. Freeman, United States District Court, District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 2681-67 (Defendant Interveners' Exhibits 1-12), having considered testimony heard during the trial of this case relevant to the issues here presented, having received and considered the "Objections to Rule to Show Cause" of Kenneth H. Herrington and George H. Herrington, and having heard argument upon the issues in open court, neither the attorney for the said Herringtons nor the Herringtons themselves having appeared in court despite notice to the said Herringtons and to their attorney as to the time and place of hearing of the Motion for

Preliminary Injunction, (the plaintiffs Herringtons having indicated in their "Objections to Rule to Show Cause" (final page) their desire for "the submission of this paper in the absence of the Herrington plaintiffs and their counsel for oral argument"), the Court makes the following

5. On August 10, 1967, trial of the present action was commenced before the Court (Timbers, J.). The trial was adjourned the same day and subsequently scheduled to recommence on October 18, 1967.

6. On October 10, 1967, a motion for leave to intervene for the purposes either of filing a motion to transfer this case to the District of Columbia, or, in the alternative, to hold the action in abeyance, was filed on behalf of Applicants for intervention, Russell Allen, et al., individually and as representatives of their class of approximately 6,600 milk producers similarly situated who produce and sell their milk under the Massachusetts-Rhode Island Milk Order, 7 C.F.R. § 1001, et seq., by Attorney Charles Patrick Ryan of the District of Columbia. The motion was assigned for argument by this Court at 2:30 p.m. on October 18, 1967.

7. On October 18, 1967, at 10:30 a.m., Attorney Ryan appeared before the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in New York City in support of a "Motion for Order Preserving Status Quo or for Relief in Nature of Prohibition" on behalf of Applicants, Russell Allen, et al. in which was sought an order preserving the status quo pending appeal in the event of an adverse decision with regard to the motions for intervention, etc., then before this Court, or in the alternative, an order prohibiting resumption of the trial of this action pending determination of said appeal.

8. On the morning of October 18, 1967, the said "Motion for Order Preserving Status Quo or for Relief in Nature of Prohibition" was dismissed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit for lack of jurisdiction.

9. On the afternoon of October 18, 1967, the said motions for leave to intervene, and for transfer, or alternatively, stay of Applicants Russell Allen, et al., were denied by this Court for reasons set forth at length in a memorandum decision of this Court.

10. On the afternoon of October 18, 1967, the said trial of the case of Cranston v. Freeman was resumed. The parties were at issue on seven separate days and extensive testimony and documentary evidence was presented to this Court. (T. 1-941). During the course of the said proceedings, the Court, on October 20, 1967, entered an order that the action be maintained by the Plaintiffs as a class action, and be defended by the Defendant Interveners as a class action. Upon completion of trial on October 27, 1967, a time schedule for completion of the transcript and filing of briefs was established.

11. Pursuant to this Court's directions, Plaintiffs' main brief was filed on or about December 8, 1967, and Defendant and Defendant Interveners' briefs were filed on or about December 22, 1967.

12. On October 18, 1967, Kenneth H. Herrington and George H. Herrington, two producers producing and selling milk produced on their respective farms to handlers operating under the order regulating the handling of milk in the Connecticut Milk Marketing Area, 7 C.F.R., § 1015.1, et seq., whose farms are located outsides of the area described in 7 C.F.R., § 1015.72(a), by said Attorney, Charles Patrick Ryan, filed, in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, a complaint challenging the validity of the same "nearby" or "farm location" differential provision at issue in the present case. In their complaint, the Plaintiffs, Herringtons, claim to act individually and also for the benefit of all persons in their class. The result of the foregoing is that a case styled Herrington and Herrington v. Freeman, United States District Court, District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 2681-67, essentially identical to the present case, is now proceeding in that court.

13. On December 4, 1967, Defendant Freeman filed, in the case of Herrington and Herrington v. Freeman, a motion to dismiss or stay that action pending determination of the Cranston case.

14. On December 13, 1967, Plaintiffs George H. Herrington and Kenneth H. Herrington filed a "Motion for Summary Judgment and/or for Relief in the Nature of Mandamus" in the case of Herrington and Herrington v. Freeman, together with a "Statement of Material Facts as to Which There is No Genuine Issue", and a 62 page memorandum in support of said motion.

15. On December 14, 1967, Plaintiffs George H. Herrington and Kenneth H. Herrington filed an opposition to the Defendant Freeman's "Motion to Dismiss or in Alternative for a Stay". Said Herringtons in their opposition represented that "the Plaintiffs and their attorney were not allowed to participate in Cranston" (p. 4). Said Plaintiffs, Herringtons, have never applied to this Court for purposes of intervention or other participation, nor have they filed any papers with it, except in response to this Court's order to show cause of December 29, 1967. Counsel for said Plaintiffs, Charles Patrick Ryan, has been aware of the Cranston action at least since May 16, 1967, and had, prior to December 14, 1967, participated in this action only as counsel for Applicants for intervention, Russell Allen, et al., as more fully appears above, and further, by filing of an appeal from this Court's denial of Applicants' Russell Allen, et al. motion to intervene to the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

16. On December 20, 1967, the District Court for the District of Columbia (Sirica, J.) ordered that Defendant Freeman's time for response to the Plaintiffs, Herringtons', motion for summary judgment and accompanying papers, be extended to and including the 20th day after a ruling upon the Government motion to dismiss or stay the proceedings in Herrington and Herrington v. Freeman, and assigned said motion to dismiss or stay for hearing on January 4, 1968.

17. On December 22, 1967, the District Court for the District of Columbia (Curran, C. J.) vacated that District Court's Order of December 20, 1967, and ordered that Defendant Freeman's response to the Plaintiffs, Herringtons', motion for summary judgment and accompanying papers be filed not later than thirty days from December 22, 1967, and furthermore, that an expedited schedule thereafter be established for the hearing of the two motions at an early date.

18. The cause of action sued upon in Civil Action No. 2681-67 now pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia is the same cause of action as is the subject of this suit.

v.

HAROLD CRANSTON, ET AL.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RESPONDENT SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE IN OPPOSITION

Petitioners are dairy farmers who market their milk under the Federal Milk Marketing Order for Connecticut, 7 C.F.R. 1015.72, and who oppose the farm location differential provision of that Order. Respondents Harold Cranston, et al., who are also dairy farmers marketing their milk under the Connecticut Order, brought suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York, challenging the validity of the differential provision. Subsequent to this Court's ruling in Zuber v. Allen, 396 U.S. 168, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that the Connecticut differential was invalid, and remanded the case to the district court for disposition consistent with the Zuber ruling. 428 F. 2d 822.

Petitioners, although satisfied with the court of appeals' holding that the differential was invalid, attack subsidiary rulings of the district court (290 F. Supp. 785 at 788–789, 812–813) and of the court of appeals, which allowed the Cranston suit to be maintained as a class action, and rejected petitioners' assertions that the Cranston suit was a collusive one solicited and controlled by the farm cooperative of which Cranston, et al., were members. In addition, petitioners seek review of questions upon which neither the district court nor the court of appeals has yet passed, concerning what relief is proper and consistent with Zuber.[1]

After a three-day trial upon petitioners' charge of collusion, the district court rejected it. The court of appeals determined that this issue had been "properly resolved" by the district court (428 F.2d at 823). The determination of this factual issue by both courts below does not warrant further review. Graver Mfg. Co. v. Linde Co., 336 U.S. 271, 275. Similarly, there is no occasion here to review the determinations of both courts below that this suit was properly brought as a class action.

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be denied.

Respectfully submitted.

ERWIN N. GRISWOLD,
Solicitor General.

JANUARY 1971.

I. THE RESPONDENTS' BRIEFS IN OPPOSITION TOTALLY FAIL TO RESPOND TO THE FACTS AND ISSUES SET FORTH IN THE PETITION FOR CERTIORARI

1. The First Question Posed By Petitioners Pertaining To Control And Collusion Involves A Question Of Law, And The Findings Of The District Court Are Not Only Clearly Erroneous In Any Event But Also Procedurally Defective.

The paramount question raised by Petitioners is whether this suit was collusive as a matter of law or as
